ALTON 'RUNS' RAIL BLOCKADE

MAC MILLAN ON WAY WITH MORE ARCTIC SECRETS

New Islands, Land of Geese; Walruses.

Donald B. MacMillan, Arctic explorer, is on the way back to civilization. After having been frozen in for 274 days, his little schooner Bowdoin broke out of the ice on the first day of August, and is now coasting southward.

MacMillan's first act when he reached an outpost of civilization was to dispatch an account of his adventures and new discoveries in that ice-bound wilderness, 150 miles north of the Arctic circle.

Three new islands discovered, 2,000 miles of travel by dog team into regions never before explored by a white man, reports of a tract of 625 square miles as white with geese that the land appears as if covered with snow, contact with the last big walrus herds of the north—these are chapter headings in the thrilling yarn.

His dispatch, which follows, was started by courier from Makkovick, an isolated trading post on the coast of Labrador, 150 miles north of Battle Harbor, and was relayed by cable from Fogo island, off the northeastern coast of Newfoundland.

MAKKOVICK, Labrador, via Fogo, N. F., Aug. 26.—All safe. No sickness, and not even an accident to report. When this reaches America, the Bowdoin will be sailing southward, well on her way to Battle Harbor. We ought to be home by the 13th of September.

The Bowdoin seems to feel the joy of motion. No wonder. For 274 days—from the 9th of November until the 1st of August—we were frozen in ice. We found an excellent haven, suiting in for the winter in a good harbor just south of Trinity islands. I named it after the vessel, and the place where we wintered and took valuable observations will be known as Bowdoin harbor on the maps of the future.

Where Winter Was Spent.

We made satisfactory progress before we pulled in for the winter and explored the west coast of Baffin land to a point 78 west longitude, 64 north latitude.

We made a quick run last summer to the arctic circle without encountering a single pan of ice. The shores of Melville peninsula were blocked with heavy ice, forty feet thick, and we could get no nearer than thirty miles. We had to retreat southward but our effort was by no means wasted. We discovered two new islands.

While attempting the passage northward between Spicer islands the Bowdoin ran aground, and for a little while we were in a bad pickle. But we worked hard, and succeeded in getting the vessel off before we were hung up by the low water.

Discovers More Islands.

We speeded the vessel southward, but again we encountered difficulties. We were forced by strong tides and prodigious ice fields on to shoal ground. In attempting passage east of Spicer island we reached a point 150 miles north of the arctic circle. From this point to Fury and Hecla strait, my objective, would only have been a twelve hour run under favorable conditions. But the tides were too strong, and the ice barrier was impenetrable. Again the Bowdoin went aground.

We discovered another large island thirty miles north of Spicer island, but we had to give up the passage. Both the western and eastern shores of Fox channel were impossible of attainment. We gave up the attempt, and turned southward.

Sails Sixty Miles on "Land."

We laid our course southeastward and made some important discoveries for the purposes of cartography. According to the maps we carried we should have struck land on this course, but we failed to do so. We sailed over an area indicated as land on all the latest and most authoritative maps, and, indeed, fifteen miles into a hypothetical interior.

More strong tide rips and shallow water forced us to retreat again. We estimated that, according to the maps in our possession, we must have sailed in the Bowdoin over sixty miles of land.

At this juncture we sighted big herds of walrus, beyond question the last remnant of the great walrus herds to be found in the north today.

Finally we made a harbor called Cape Dorchester. It was named 291 years ago by an explorer named Fox.

LLOYD GEORGE WILL GIVE BOOK PROFITS TO WAR CHARITIES

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Prime Minister Lloyd George has decided to accept no profits from the first volume of his reminiscences, but will surrender the whole amount, estimated at $250,000, to war charities, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, New York Times, and associated newspapers have bought the serial rights in America for $100,000.

This decision by Mr. Lloyd George was made during a holiday at Criccieth, where he accomplished considerable work on the book and was so impressed by the poignancy of the story he had to tell that, in his own words to a friend, "I couldn't look myself in the face if I made any money out of it." In this decision he has the loyal support of his wife.

The decision is all the more remarkable as Mr. Lloyd George is really a poor man. Apart from his official salary, he has $10,000 a year under the Carnegie bequest and $1,500 or $2,000 income from investments. He recently told a friend that, apart from his official salary, he had never earned $10,000 in his life and did not want more than enough to satisfy his simple tastes.

PIPE ORGAN FROM CANADA RECEIVES CLOSE INSPECTION

Sixty tons of pipe organ arriving at the Grace Episcopal church of Oak Park from Montreal, Canada, was carefully inspected by revenue officers yesterday, working on a tip that a large quantity of Canadian whisky was concealed in the pipes, blowers, motors, swells and other mechanism.

The revenuers found nothing, and following their inspection members of the vestry of the church made an inspection on their own account, it is said, in the hope or fear that something hidden away in the organ parts might have been overlooked. The vestrymen also found nothing; and none of them would state definitely whether he was gratified or disappointed.

ALL FORD PLANTS CLOSE ON SEPT. 16

Blames Wall Street for Industrial Crisis.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 26.—Industry, the country over, must "throw up his hand in surrender," within a few weeks, if the rail and coal strikes continue, Henry Ford declared today in announcing the decision of the Ford Motor company to close its plants here and in many other cities on Sept. 16, because of the fuel situation.

Mr. Ford held financial interests responsible for the industrial tieup, declaring the "money barons" were manipulating the labor unions and that public officials, state and national, were impotent in the crisis.

The strikes would end, he continued, "when the majority of the people are cold and hungry enough to resort to drastic action."

Lays It to Financial Interests.

Continuance of these disturbances to the economic life of the nation is due simply to the greed and avarice of Wall street," Mr. Ford asserted, adding that these interests, "dominated the railroads, coal mines and public utilities of the country."

The deadlock in strike negotiations indicated, he declared, the existence of "a plot to unload the demoralized and run down railroads on to the government at their own price and to mulct the people through excessive coal prices."

Orders Sent Broadcast.

Telegrams have been sent to Ford agencies in all parts of the country stating that the plants would close.

The shutdown means that all three plants of the Ford company will be idle, putting about 55,000 men out of work. With the assembling plants spread out over the country, which also will be closed, this will affect a total of 85,000 men, strictly Ford employés, and not taking into consideration the thousands of others dependent on Ford orders. These others represent roughly around 300,000 men.

Ford's Statement.

"The coal situation has become impossible," Mr. Ford said. "For the last several weeks we have seen a situation approaching which we feared would force us to close. We greatly regret having to take that step. My son and I returned early from our eastern trip, and the night before last, with all possible data and information on the subject before us, we strove until almost daylight trying to find some way out without closing down.

"Every way we turned we were confronted by the situation that under the present handling of coal there would never be a time when we would have enough coal to operate the several departments of the plant simultaneously.

"We therefore decided that of necessity we must close down sooner or later, so we agreed on Sept. 16."

Mr. Ford was asked when he hoped the plants could resume operations.

He shook his head and said, "I haven't the slightest idea."

NAB 11 REDS, 9 STILL ALIENS, IN MEETING RAID

Mob of Foreigners Menaces Agents.

Eleven alleged Reds, delegates to the second annual convention of the Trades Union Educational league, were locked up at the detective bureau last night by special agents of the department of justice, who, headed by Detective Sergeant Laurence McDonough, raided the convention headquarters in Scandinavian Labor lyceum, 2734 Hirsch boulevard.

EARL BROWDER. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

Great crowds gathered in the northwest side foreign, semi-radical colony to the neighborhood as the news of the raid spread. Angry shouts sounded from the throng and hoarse mutterings were heard on all sides as the men were loaded into patrol wagons and carted to the bureau.

Foster Not Arrested.

William Z. Foster, well known radical leader, organizer of the league and chairman of the convention, was not arrested. Foster is now at liberty on bonds pending a hearing on a fugitive warrant calculated to bring him back to Michigan to face a charge of violating the Michigan state syndicalism act.

Two of the alleged violators were taken on warrants charging them also with violation of the Michigan syndicalist law in the radical gathering in Berrien county recently. The nine others will be turned over to the United States immigration authorities for deportation.

The federal men in going through the crowd of more than 200 delegates discovered that, although all nine have for a number of years been residents of the United States and constantly engaged in Red activities, none of them is a citizen.

Foster's Editor in Tolls.

The two prisoners wanted by Sheriff Bridgman of Berrien county, Mich., were Earl Browder, 2108 Seminary avenue, Chicago, secretary to Foster and editor of the Labor Herald, published at the league headquarters, 118 North La Salle street, and Jack Schulman, 35 years old, Winnipeg, Canada.

Those to be turned over to the immigration bureau for deportation in connection with their alleged Red activities are:

Martin Van Heck, 923 Kensington avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich., 41 years old, and a Hollander.

John Orozelnen, 42 years old, Astoria, Ore., a Finn.

Phil Allenberg, 41, of 4222 West Van Buren street, a Lithuanian.

Jacob Feldmark, 32, of 867 North Sacramento boulevard, a Pole.

Nathan Greenberg, 27, of 3436 Grenshaw street, a Pole.

J. Harlatein, 30, of 2550 Potomac avenue, a Russian.

Jerry Hadrada, 35, of 2855 West 21st place, a Bohemian.

Felix Krazowski, 31, 1435 Emma street, a Pole.

A. Ovegaard, 1636 North Campbell avenue, a Dane.

Raiders Interrupt Chairman.

At 9 o'clock last night the government agents walked suddenly into the meeting while Foster was speaking. Foster stopped. Several men, sensing a raid, leaped to their feet. A hum of excitement swept over the room. Then Sergt. McDonough spoke.

"Here, Foster," the detective said. "We don't want to arrest everybody in the place and we're not after you. But we've got a couple of warrants here and we want the men named on them."

Foster told the delegates to be quiet. "Go ahead," he said to the officers.

McDonough and the special agents then walked about among the men seeking Browder and Schulman. In the meantime, here and there, they stopped to question others, now and again picking one out of his chair and motioning him to one side of the room.

After the inspection and inquisition had ended Browder, Schulman, and the nine aliens stood to one side, and McDonough called the wagons.

Deserted Wife Says Bergen Merited Death

New York, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—John Bergen, 26 year old film daredevil and lady killer, who was shot and killed last night by George F. Cline, movie location man, in the latter's home at Edgewater, N. J., was a married man, although he had posed as a bachelor.

His wife, Mrs. May Bergen, went to Edgewater after reading newspaper accounts of her husband's death, and in the police station met Mrs. Mary Cline whose relations with Bergen led to the shooting. The women wept, and kissed each other as they discussed the tragedy.

The widow, however, displayed no sorrow at her husband's fate. "He deserved just what he got," she said.

It appeared that Bergen, the movie actor, had deserted her and her daughter, Margaret, a year after their marriage in 1917. He had been a national guard artillery sergeant. There he had learned the horsemanship that he later capitalized as a "wild west" performer in vaudeville and the movies.

Was Also a Slacker.

When the war came, although he had deserted her, she obtained his exemption from the draft. From then to the time of his death, she said, his career was a succession of amorous affairs.

Neither the woman who was deserted nor the woman who was betrayed is a striking beauty. Mrs. Bergen is tall and thin. The other woman is somewhat better looking, better dressed, of medium height, and rather plump. She, too, is a mother, having a little boy and girl. She is 26 years old, several years younger than her husband.

Since going into the movies a year ago, Bergen had become well known for the "daredevil" stunts he performed for the Fox, Selznick and other companies. He had doubled for Eugene O'Brien and other stars in dangerous stunts. "Bride Thirteen," was one of his pictures.

Another Premonitory Note.

When Bergen died in the Edgewater police station, a piece of blood stained paper with the words, "George Cline killed me," was found in his pocket. In addition, however, Prosecutor Hart announced today another note was found, in which Bergen said that he expected Cline to shoot him.

This note said: "If by a chance I am shot within the next few weeks it will be done by a George Cline, alias George Watz of Edgewater, N. J. For reasons unknown to me, he is threatening me. No doubt a German Luger, caliber .25, will be used, as it is a favorite of his many guns. I am John Bergen, 214 East 115th street."

Cline, held without bail on the charge of murder, today gave Prosecutor Hart a revised version of the shooting.

First Story He Told.

In his original story of the duel that he proposed between himself and Bergen on account of his wife's honor, he did not explain why the duel did not come off. He merely said that after giving Bergen a pistol and telling him to defend himself, he took the weapon away, and that the shooting came afterward, because Bergen attacked him with a blackjack. The whole thing, he had said, took place in the presence of Mrs. Cline and her two brothers.

Today, however, he said that after Bergen had confessed his relations with Mrs. Cline, before her and her brothers, he took Bergen upstairs to a room, handed him a pistol, and was about to turn off the gaslight so that the duel could be fought in the dark when Bergen pointed his gun at him and seemed about to shoot him down treacherously.

Then, Cline now says, he sprang at Bergen and grasped the pistol, which went off while it was still in Bergen's grasp.

As the prosecutor related the new version of the killing, Cline said that Mrs. Cline had been acting strangely

OFFICIALS GET "HUMMER" OUT OF ROODHOUSE

400,000 Men Want Wartime Pay.

Roodhouse, Ill., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Manned by officials of the Chicago and Alton railway locomotive department, when it was found impossible to induce engineers and firemen to return to work, the Hummer, Kansas City to Chicago, was taken from here to Bloomington late this afternoon.

Nearly one hundred passengers, marooned here when Big Four employes struck because of explosions near the roundhouse Friday night, took passage on the Hummer, which will leave Bloomington for Chicago with regular crews. All other trains, including three that arrived today, have not been moved.

There are more than two hundred passengers now stranded here, and hotels and private homes are filled with them. This division point is completely isolated from the world, so far as railway service is concerned. Many of the travelers were preparing to leave here for other towns by automobile.

The Hummer, which was due here at 1:05 o'clock this morning, did not arrive until 2:30 this afternoon, and did not get away until 7:30 this evening. All negotiations to get the men back to work have been futile.

400,000 DEMAND WAR PAY

Maintenance of way men on practically all of the American railroads—400,000 of them—will ask for an increase of pay from the United States Railroad Labor board tomorrow. According to the announcement made by E. F. Grable, president of the union, the demands will call for a minimum wage of 48 cents an hour, the war time rate, as against the present scale of 23 to 35 cents.

The demands of the maintenance of way men, who declined to strike when the shopmen laid down their tools several weeks ago, come at a critical point in the controversy between the roads and the striking shopmen. It comes on the heels of the announcement of a finish fight between the roads and the shopmen after all peace parleys had failed, but whether it would complicate matters is something which neither officials of the maintenance of way men nor the roads would discuss.

Refused to Go Out.

The filing of the demands for increased pay is in keeping with the policy announced by the way men at the time the shopmen were contemplating their strike, according to President Grable. At that time the way men refused to go out, agreeing to resubmit their differences and grievances to the labor board.

More than 100 of the 105 railroads in the country that are affected by the demands will be parties to the hearing. The maintenance of way men will only present one case, however, and this one hearing and the one decision upon it will cover all the roads.

"We are asking for a minimum of 48 cents an hour," said President Grable, "with a graduated scale upward for skilled or hazardous work. Arguments for the increase will be based on the present upward trend of wages outside the railroad industry and the increased cost of living. Wages all over the country are increasing. Cost of living is advancing and economists tell us we are entering a period of prosperity.

Crossing Pay Low.

"Our organization has some men, such as crossing watchmen, who are drawing as low as 17½ cents an hour. This is a general condition throughout the United States, not a local one, as claimed in regard to the establishment of a 23 cent minimum, which, it is said, applies only to Negroes and Mexicans of the south."

Testimony before the board, according to President Grable, will consist of figures and facts collected since the last wage decision and based on living costs and the approach of prosperity. Expert witnesses and statisticians will testify for the maintenance of way men during the hearing.

"We will show that a lot of our men," President Grable added, "are drawing less than $600 a year. Economists and cost experts have shown that $1,000 a year is the least amount upon which a laboring man can hope to feed and clothe his family."

Gain in Shops.

According to figures made public yesterday by the Western Presidents' Committee on Public Relations, the western roads, since Aug. 25, have made a gain of 30,833 men in their shops. The number now at work, according to the figures, is 88,911.

"These figures show," the statement reads, "that there is a steady increase in the number of men at work. There are a few places where service is being interfered with by walkouts of employés in violation of their contracts, but it should be noted that these real interferences with operation are not due to the shop employés' strike."

First public announcement of engines condemned as unfit for service by federal inspectors was made yesterday from Wabash, Ind., where freight service was tied up. Federal inspectors condemned all engines in the shops of the Big Four, it is reported. Passenger trains, it is reported, were being operated from Indianapolis to Benton Harbor without change.

"While I do not like the phrase, 'fight to a finish,' I really see no 'next move' in the present trouble," H. E. Byram, president of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road, said, on his return from New York, where he participated in unsuccessful peace meetings.

Over 100,000,000 hours of work must be made up before the railroad equipment of the country is back where it was July 1, when the strike started, J. F. McGrath, vice president of the shop crafts organization, declared in a statement last night.

New Big Four Walkouts.

Jefferson City, Mo., Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—Approximately 200 members of the Big Four brotherhoods, employed by the Missouri Pacific, voted to strike this afternoon unless the company removes armed guards from the railroad yards. The strike vote followed the arrest of Mayor Paul Hunt of Jefferson City in the yards. He later was released.

Missouri Pacific trainmen at Nevada, Mo., walked out this morning, according to reports.

Spikes Pulled from Ties.

Memphis, Tenn., Aug. 26.—Report was made to the police tonight that track inspectors had discovered twenty-six spikes drawn from the cross ties, loosening a rail on the main line of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad near Memphis. Special police squads have been detailed to guard the track inside the city.

HARDING WANTS STRIKE LAWS TO WIELD IN CRISIS

But He Will Not Act Until "Necessity Arises."

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Legislation empowering the federal government to take over the railroads and the anthracite mines will be welcomed by President Harding before congress recesses if the strikes are not settled before that time. This was declared today by officials in close touch with the White House.

Mr. Harding, it was explained, does not expect to take any hasty action and he may never make use of the authority sought, but he does not want congress to go away and leave him powerless to deal with any emergency which may develop in either the rail or coal situation.

Leaves for Day's Vacation.

After a day of discussing the industrial situation at the White House, President Harding left Washington on the Mayflower late this afternoon for a twenty-four hour cruise in Chesapeake bay. He was accompanied by Mrs. Harding, and a number of administration leaders, including Secretaries Hoover and Fall, Attorney General Daugherty, Senators Cummins (Iowa), Kellogg (Minn.), and Chairman Lasker of the shipping board. Mr. Harding, it was said, would discuss the strikes with these advisers.

Measures giving the President authority to assume control of railroads and mines will be introduced in congress within the next few days unless the situation clears, it was declared.

In conferences with senators today, the President indicated a willingness to give the railroad executives further opportunity to demonstrate that they can cope with the shopmen's strike and to prove that they can operate the roads to meet the nation's traffic needs.

Until it becomes apparent that a breakdown of transportation is inevitable the administration will make no move to take over the roads. Senators say the next week will bring a showdown.

As for the anthracite strike, the President's position, according to responsible spokesmen, is that another opportunity should be given the operators and miners to get together before any attempt is made to operate the mines under federal control. In administration circles there is a feeling of confidence that a settlement of the anthracite strike will come soon.

Congress Only Marks Time.

Congress made little progress today with the legislation recommended by President Harding to relieve the coal situation. Senator Cummins [Iowa] sailed together the senate interstate commerce committee, of which he is chairman, to consider the bill designed to regulate profits and distribution. Difference of opinion arose concerning the measure and at the suggestion of Senator Pomerene [Ohio], Democrat, action was postponed. The committee will meet again Monday to decide whether to grant hearings to coal operators who wish to be heard on the measure.

Senator Borah [Idaho], chairman of the senate labor committee, again brought up his bill creating a coal investigating commission, but after it had been sharply criticized by Senator Reed [Mo.] and Senator Stanley [Ky.], Democrats, it was laid aside for the day.

Called "Soothing Syrup."

Senator Reed characterized it as a "bottle of legislative soothing syrup" and said that its only effect would be "to give the operators five more months to starve the miners and the miners seven months more to freeze the public."

Representative Winslow [Mass.], chairman of the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce, introduced the administration bill for the regulation of distribution and prices. It was framed along the lines of the Cummins senate bill. House leaders predicted its passage early next week.

With respect to the proposed legislation giving the President power to take over the roads and mines, there is certain to be considerable opposition within the Republican ranks, it was learned today, although objections may be withdrawn by reason of the President's assurance that he would not utilize the authority unless the emergency should be extreme.

Go Slow, Party's Warning.

Prominent men in the party are known to have counseled the President to go slow in the matter. They argue that the government could do nothing with the railroads, or mines for that matter, that the companies themselves cannot do, and that to take them over would result in piling another big deficit on the treasury and a tax burden on the public which would rest heavily for many years.

Among the President's callers today were Senator Watson [Ind.] and John T. Adams, chairman of the Republican national committee. Both urged caution in dealing with the strike situation, expressing the view that there was no present emergency calling for government operation of the railroads. Both believe such a move would be a political mistake unless it is demonstrated that there is a complete breakdown of transportation.

Settle Down to Battle.

New York, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—All hope of immediate peace wiped out railroad executives and striking shop craft leaders today realigned their forces and settled down for a finish fight, each confidently predicting early victory.

Organizers and speakers were sent into every shop district in the east to notify the strikers that they must fight on. Railroad employment agencies got ready to enlist more men, while company guards, who had relaxed their vigilance during the days of parleying, returned to rigid patrol duty.

That the brotherhood chiefs believe the railroads cannot bear up under the strike burden was indicated by T. C. Cashen, president of the switchmen's union.

"We are not so sorry for the strikers," he said, "as we are for the public. They are going to be the sufferers more and more as the strike is prolonged."

600 Miners Downstate Stage Another Walkout

Harrisburg, Ill., Aug. 26.—Three hundred coal miners employed in the O'Gara mine No. 3 here, and approximately the same number at the Peabody coal mine at Eldorado went on strike today. The strikers' grievances were declared to be based on night engineers being asked to do their own firing.

PAYS TAXI BILL; FREED.

Arrested for nonpayment of a taxi bill, Joseph Malone, 6565 Wentworth avenue, was discharged by Judge Joseph Schulman in Englewood court yesterday when Wilson H. Robin, a Yellow taxi driver, informed the court the bill had been paid.

HAPPY BUT RINGLESS

MRS. JUNIE GRIFFIN HAND.

ALL'S LOVELY

Mrs. Junie Griffin Hand, reconciled with Edward J. Hand, bond broker, whom she recently sued for divorce, was yesterday made a defendant in a suit for $500 filed in the Municipal court by Attorney Benjamin Ehrlich, her counsellor in the divorce proceedings.

Involved in the suit is Mrs. Hand's wedding ring, which was placed with Attorney Ehrlich, according to Hand, as security against the possibility of a reconciliation.

"I paid him $50 as a retainer," said Mrs. Hand, "and we agreed that he would get whatever he could as further fees by order of the court. Because I had been reconciled with Mr. Hand once before, Mr Ehrlich demanded that I give him my ring as proof that I would not listen to any pleas of settlement.

"When we were reconciled Attorney Ehrlich refused to return the ring and asserted that I owed him at least $500 for his services, although he had done nothing. He said I had "played a dirty trick" by making up with Mr. Hand. As long as there was no divorce, I don't see that he is entitled to more than the retainer."

"When I demanded the return of the ring," declared Hand, "Ehrlich told me that my wife would have to come to his office and apologize to him for becoming reconciled with me before she could have her ring."

Suit for replevin of the ring will be begun tomorrow by Attorney Charles E. Erbstein, counsel for Hand.

WILLIAMSON SET TO ERASE STAIN OF HERRIN CRIME

State Forces Gather for Grand Jury Probe.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

Marion, Ill., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Williamson county, at least that portion of it with which this corresponednt has come in contact today, is smarting under the lash laid upon it since the Herrin massacre, from the White House down to citizens of neighboring counties, and is waiting impatiently for the chance to show the world that justice still lives here, that it is a normal American community, and that the courts and officers of the law are functioning efficiently.

This part of the community proposes to begin next Monday the job of wiping the names "bloody" and "lawless" from the record of the county, and looks to the special grand jury which has been summoned to investigate the mine killings of June 22 as the initial step in this process.

Many Indictments Expected.

It is expected that results will come from the investigation and that a great number of indictments will be returned against men who were in the miners' army the night of the slaughter.

The personnel of the grand jury and the names of witnesses are being guarded. Special deputies appointed by District Attorney Delos Duty, who is working under direct instructions of Attorney General Brundage, have been picking the jurors, and the district attorney believes that he has a jury that will not be afraid and the majority of whose members are not connected in

"If any one thinks this case is not going to be prosecuted to a finish, let them watch and see," said District Attorney Duty today. "There is no ground for criticism of the prosecuting officers of this county."

Will Escort Brundage.

The attorney general and his staff, including Special Prosecutor G. W. Middlekauf, will arrive in Marion tomorrow morning. It is learned here that it has been intimated to Mr. Brundage that it would not be safe for him to venture into this county at this time. Mr. Duty will meet him at the border and escort him here.

During the day the case will be prepared for presentation to the grand jury, Judge D. T. Hartwell is preparing his charge. A. W. Kerr, chief counsel for the United Mine Workers of America in Illinois, has moved from Springfield to Marion and will watch developments. Besides the criminal action, there are civil suits against the union for property damage. These and death claims are said to aggregate a million dollars.

SOLICIT $25,000 HERE.

With Attorney General Edward J. Brundage and Special United States Attorney George W. Middlekauff already on their way to the scene of the Herrin mine massacre, officials of the Illinois Chamber of Commerce are preparing to mail letters to 6,500 business men in Chicago soliciting funds to aid in the investigation. Chicago's quota has been set at $25,000.

CLEVELAND COAL PEACE ALREADY BEARS RESULTS

Output of Six Million Tons Last Week.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Shipments from bituminous coal mines opening under the Cleveland wage agreement have already materially increased production, according to the weekly report of the geological survey. An output of at least six million tons for the last week, Aug. 21-26, is already assured by the reports for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday; an additional tonnage from other districts that are known to have signed the agreement may raise the total to 6,250,000 tons.

Production of anthracite, however, remains practically zero.

"The increase came almost exclusively from mines formerly closed by the strike," says the geological survey.

Rail Strike Hinders Delivery.

"In the middle and south Appalachians transportation difficulties still limited output and shipments were but little larger than the week before.

"Even with an output of 6,250,000 tons of bituminous coal a week present production is still below normal. In the corresponding week of 1921 the country raised 9,640,000 tons of coal of which 1,890,000 tons was anthracite and 7,750,000 tons bituminous coal. The year before that the total raised was 13,250,000 tons. In comparison with these figures, the present weekly output of all coal, anthracite and bituminous, is from 4,000,000 to 6,000,000 tons short of normal."

Anthracite Output Stagnant.

The anthracite mines remain shut down on account of the miners' strike, and production is insignificant in quantity. The total output in the week ended Aug. 19 was approximately 39,000 net tons, principally steam size, recovered by river dredges. In the corresponding week a year ago 1,529,000 tons were produced.

Cumulative production during 1922 to date stands at about 22,900,000 tons, against 59,129,000 tons during the corresponding period in 1921. Shipments of anthracite from storage yards during the week ended Aug. 19 again decreased in volume, and were composed chiefly of pea coal and smaller sizes.

MIDWEST SHOWS IMPROVEMENT IN LABOR DEMAND

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Labor conditions in Illinois and other midwest states were reported today by the department of labor as follows:

Illinois—In July 190 registered for each 100 jobs at thirteen offices, 103 in June, and 27 in July last year. The manufacturing cities, Chicago, Rockford, and Joliet, show the best conditions. Demand for factory workers and unskilled labor exceeds the supply. Farm hands, totaling 2,554, were placed in the last two months.

Indiana—The demand for common labor exceeds the suply. There is a small surplus of skilled labor, owing to coal and railroad strikes. There is a demand for farm, domestic, and female factory workers.

Wisconsin—Logging, stone crushing, quarrying, building construction, and highway construction make a strong demand for labor throughout the state. Coal and railway strikes have caused a decreased employment in factories, especially metals. The chief shortage is in farm hands, woodsmen, and common labor. There is a surplus in clerical help.

SOFT COAL MINES DEMAND OUTSIDE DOCTORS FOR ILLS

Oppose an Inquiry Under Cleveland Plan.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

Illinois and Indiana operators declare that three-fifths of the bituminous tonnage of America will not participate in the national joint conference at Cleveland Oct. 2, at which, under terms of the Cleveland peace treaty, a fact finding agency is to be set up to discover what is the matter with the mining industry. Instead, the absentees plan to get behind the plan contemplated by President Harding under which the maladies of mining would be diagnosed by a commission outside the industry. Illinois producers declare that the miners and operators themselves never will be able to prescribe and apply any real remedies because they are too close to the troubles and have self-interest. They contend the only effective study of conditions can be made by a board of outside experts.

Half Billion Added to Bill.

Over $500,000,000 a year is piled on America's fuel bill by ninety-three idle days a year for the bituminous pits, and both owners and diggers are hoping some way will be discovered of reducing intermittency of employment. John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, estimates that the labor of about 60,000,000 man-days is lost each year for the reason that the mines run an average of 215 days or less out of a possible 308 days.

At $10 a day, Mr. Lewis points out, this amounts to a yearly loss of $600,000,000—"not a loss of anything that already exists, but a loss of what should exist."

Overdevelopment, overcapitalization, and overmanning of the industry are recognized by both operators and unions as constituting the worst ailment of mining. It has reached the point where, although the annual demand for fuel runs about 500,000,000 tons a year, the present capacity of the mines is between 700,000,000 and 800,000,000 tons.

"Absenteeism" Held One Cause.

The operators insist "absenteeism" is quite as much a cause of excess labor in the coal mines as is intermittency of work. Dr. F. C. Honnold, after tabulating reports from a group of Illinois mines, recently pointed out that in 41 mines that averaged 219 days hoisting coal in 1920, the 29,100 employes averaged only 117 days each. From which he concluded that 15,584 men working every day the mines hoisted coal would have been sufficient to man the pits, and 13,500 more men were on the pay rolls than were necessary if all workers worked the 219 days the pits were open. This is in forty-one mines.

One generally accepted estimate has been that if the mines by adjustment of the industry and the market could operate sixty to ninety days a year more than now and if "absenteeism," were reduced by the miners, one-third of the mine workers would not be required and would be released for other industrial lines. Applied to Illinois it would mean that if the industry were properly organized 60,000 men would do the work now done by 90,000.

LEWIS READY TO TALK HARD COAL PEACE TO U. S.

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 26.—The United Mine Workers are ready to negotiate a satisfactory wage agreement with governmental representatives should the federal government take over the anthracite mines, in case no agreement is reached with the operators, John L. Lewis, president of the union, said tonight in a statement relative to the possibility of such action by congress.

With a deadlock existing between the miners and operators for peace in the hard coal fields, where a suspension has been in effect since April 1, Mr. Lewis said that the anthracite consuming territory will be seriously embarrassed for lack of fuel during the coming winter, and describing the possibilities of such a situation as "appalling."

Following a telephone conversation with Secretary Hoover today, Senator Pepper held out hope that the dispute could be settled amicably without governmental seizure.

SLAYS BROTHER OF WIFE; CLAIMS SELF-DEFENSE

Stephen Hnatt shot and killed Edward Drozd, 4931 South Artesian avenue, last night, when the latter attempted to interfere in a quarrel between Hnatt and his wife, Dora, in Hnatt's hardware store at 1746 West 51st street. Hnatt and his wife and several witnesses to the shooting were taken into custody by New City police.

Witnesses told police that Mrs. Hnatt and Drozd, her brother, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Nemitz had gone to Hnatt's hardware store. While they were there, a quarrel arose between Mr. and Mrs. Hnatt, who have been estranged. The quarrel became a tussel, developed into fisticuffs, and Drozd leaped over the counter and grasped Hnatt by the throat.

Hnatt broke away, according to witnesses, ran to a drawer where he seized the revolver, and shot Drozd.

FRENCH REJECT GERMAN OFFER OF GUARANTEES

Expected to Act Alone to Collect Debt.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—Premier Poincare has rejected the eleventh hour guarantees offered by the German government and ...dependent measures by France ...hat Germany seemed assured to ...ght after failure of the reparations ...mission to obtain in Berlin the basis ... a compromise acceptable to France. ...France will act even if the reparations ...mission votes Monday, as expected, ...o grant Germany a brief moratorium. The German proposals, handed to the ...parations mission just before it left ...for Paris, provided for a contract be... ...tween the German government and ...the biggest German industrials, includ... ...ing Hugo Stinnes, for delivery during ...the period of a moratorium of products ...of the Ruhr mines and wood from the ...state forests. German industry would ...guarantee faithful delivery and pen... ...alties would be enforced against the ...industrialists in the event the schedule ...was not lived up to.

British Lose Optimism.

The French premier's opposition is said to be due to the fact that he believes the scheme made the industrialists more important than the government, and since the business party in Germany is in a position to dictate to the government, refusal to carry out the contract would leave the German government powerless to act and France would be as bad off as before.

British optimism, which continued ...o run up to this afternoon, had given ...way tonight to frank gloom over the ...situation after M. Poincare refused to accept the latest German proposals. The British think these proposals ...fairly meet M. Poincare's demand for the German mines and forests by ...actually giving France the products ...of these natural resources without ...handing the district over to political ...control. The district in possession of ...France, it is contended by the British, ...would only add chaos to the already ...critical situation.

Says Germany Does Its Best.

Sir John Bradbury, just before the ...meeting of the reparations commission, told the Associated Press he was ...convinced that Germany was really ...trying to meet the French view, and ...he urged that the French government ...meet Germany half way. Sir John ...authorized the publication of the following statement:

"I am satisfied that the German government is making a serious effort to meet the views of the French government in so far as the actual situation in Germany will permit. I am strongly of the opinion that the French government ought to do its best to meet the German government half way."

Financial Situation Desperate.

He further informed the commission that the German financial situation was desperate and that social order in its entirety in Germany was threatened. Other members of the mission, including M. Mauclere, revealed that they were equally impressed with the seriousness of the German crisis.

The French reported that they were ...amazed to see great evidences of prosperity in Germany, and declared that a large number of Germans, who apparently had discarded their own currency, were using dollars instead.

LITTLE ENTENTE PARLEY CLOSES; RENEW ALLIANCE

MARIENBAD, Czecho - Slovakia, Aug. 26.—Complete agreement was reached by Premier Pachitch of Jugo-Slavia and Premier Benes of Czecho-Slovakia, in their discussion yesterday of the international situation, especially in its bearing on their respective countries. The alliance between the two nations was extended and improved.

The premiers decided on measures to be taken later to deal with economic, financial, and commercial questions so as to strengthen the position of their people.

RUSSIA STRIKES IF FRANCE NABS RUHR—TROTZKY

Says Red Army Is Cut to 800,000 Men.

MOSCOW, Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—Russia has already reduced her fighting forces to 800,000 men, and is always ready to enter any disarmament conference which gives guarantees of success, she does not anticipate any immediate intervention, but considers an attack is always possible, and it is doubtful if she could remain passive in the event that France invaded the Ruhr region and enlisted Poland in a renewal of the conflict with Germany.

Leon Trotzky, soviet minister of war, made these assertions in an interview in which he submitted to a crossfire of questions from fifteen foreign correspondents regarding the soviet's internal problems. He explained that Russia is now so tranquil that Premier Lenin can take his much needed rest and at the same time remain perfectly in touch with the problems of state.

First Interview in Months.

This was the first time in many months that Trotsky has received a group of correspondents. Suave, plump and impeccably groomed in his army blouse, he answered questions in fluent French, smiling most of the time, except when he snapped an occasional belligerent answer.

"Our fighting forces have been reduced from 5,500,0000 to 800,000, including myself," he said. "We proposed disarmament at Genoa and also to the Baltic states, from which we received evasive answers. But if any government, the American, for instance, would propose to us a disarmament conference with any guarantee for success, we would come gladly."

Asked if Russia would enter a trade agreement with the United States without full recognition, M. Trotzky waved a well manicured hand and said airily:

"What does recognition mean, anyway? That is not important, but commercial relations are. Recognition, what is it? I can breathe the fresh air without Mr. Hughes recognising the fact. I breathed it yesterday, I breathed it today, and I shall breathe it tomorrow."

No Political Freedom—Yet.

M. Trotzky declared that the soviet government prefers the humane method of exiling its opponents in Russia, rather than crushing them, but added in reply to a question that the political freedom of party organization will be restored in Russia only when the power of capital is broken.

Regarding the American relief administration, the minister explained that he considers it not only a humanitarian organization but also an "instrument" through which America could be informed of Russian conditions. He added: "I am tranquil regarding the results of their investigations."

Explaining the international situation with reference to Russia's need for defense, M. Trotzky said: "Who can tell what will come of the Franco-British conference? No one."

Later he expressed the opinion that France was adopting the very tactics to drive Germany into revolution.

"If France, by invading the Ruhr, and by the assistance of Poland, precipitated a new European conflict, do you think Russia could remain passive?" he was asked, and his reply was "I doubt it."

"If the occasion came for a revolution in Germany," M. Trotzky said, "Russia and Germany would form an unconquerable bloc economically and agriculturally. This assertion, of course, will be misrepresented in America, where," he added with a laugh, "I am in bad repute."

"Beat Capitalism First."

Trotzky's jaw hardened when the Associated Press correspondent asked if the government had any intention of restoring the liberty of political organizations to Russian parties other than the soviet.

"When capitalism is beaten!" was his answer.

With reference to the recent decree of banishment for political offenders, Trotzky said the trial of the social revolutionist had proved in the event Russia were attacked from abroad those persons who were constantly waiting for a change in the government would become agents for the enemy.

The minister explained that the conferences at Genoa and The Hague had shown clearly what Lenin meant when he said in regard to the so-called retreat of the bolsheviki toward capitalism: "We are in a transitory stage which will give us the experience of the capitalistic world, but we will not recognize or restore private property."

Michigan City Collector $2,195 Short, Experts Say

Michigan City, Ind., Aug. 26.—Russell Lingard, who was city water collector here for some months prior to Aug. 9 and who is being held to Circuit court on a charge of embezzlement, is said to have been $2,195.87 short up until July 31, according to experts checking up his accounts today.

LET GIRL ESCAPE JAIL, THEN SHE DESERTS GUARD

He's Arrested Trying to "Nab" Her Here.

A love affair between a jail guard and a woman prisoner and her escape from the Cleveland workhouse figured yesterday in the arrest of John Whitmore, 53 years old. He was taken into custody by Sergts. Charles Rhodes and M. P. Parker, who saw him chasing a screaming woman down the street, waving a pair of handcuffs.

The story began two years ago, according to the detectives, when Whitmore was a guard at the Cleveland House of Correction and Mrs. Gertrude Staples, 26 years old, was serving a sentence for bigamy.

Whitmore became infatuated with the woman, planned and effected her escape, and then got her a position as a maid. After a time, however, she wearied of his attentions and fled.

For a time Whitmore had no knowledge of her whereabouts, but several days ago, learning that she was living at 1421 West Jackson boulevard, he forged a warrant for her arrest and, posing as a deputy sheriff, went to the house. He waited outside until she appeared and then attempted to put the handcuffs on her wrists.

Mrs. Staples screamed and ran east in Jackson boulevard with Whitmore at her heels. At South Racine avenue the two police sergeants joined in the chase, captured both Whitmore and the woman and took them to the Desplaines street station. After they had told their stories, Mrs. Staples was released and the former guard was held.

SENATE GAGGED TO PUSH BONUS TO VOTE TUESDAY

Debate Is Limited on Amendments.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26. — A unanimous consent agreement to take up the soldiers' bonus bill Monday and push it to a final vote was entered into today by the senate.

With a view of getting a vote late Tuesday it was agreed that after 6 p. m. Monday no senator should speak more than once nor longer than twenty minutes on any amendment.

The unanimous consent agreement was proposed by Senator Robinson [Ark.], Democrat, but it imposed no limitation on debate on the bill itself. It was suggested, however, that there might be a move to that end later should it prove necessary.

Veto May Bring Fight.

Senators Underwood [Ala.], Democrat, and Borah [Idaho], Republican, said they would offer no objection to speedy action. Senator Underwood gave formal notice that his fight would be against passage of the measure over President Harding's veto in the event that it was returned to congress with executive disapproval.

By common understanding the senate did not undertake today to bring to a vote any of the several amendments thus far offered.

Ashurst Supports Bill.

In promising his support to any bill that would give the former service men the justice to which he believed they were entitled, Senator Ashurst [Ariz.], Democrat, told the senate it would be forced to decide among other things whether it would listen to "the cry of commercialization of patriotism," when it had not done that at the end of the war.

Also supporting the bill, Senator Ransdell [La.], Democrat, told the senate that if congress wished to settle its obligations to the veterans it could find means to do so and that if it did not there were "a thousand excuses to hide behind."

GRANTS DELAY IN ALLEGED $500,000 SWINDLE CASE

Acting at the request of Assistant State's Attorney E. J. McCarthy, Judge Lawrence B. Jacobs in South Clark street court yesterday continued until Sept. 19 confidence game charges against two men who are alleged to have swindled hundreds of persons out of nearly $50,000.

The men, Charles E. Osborne, 639 Cornelia avenue, founder of the C. E. Osborne company, a concern dealing in stocks and bonds, and organizer of the Royal Stores company, 3906-20 North Lincoln avenue, and of the Central Radio company, 20 East Jackson boulevard, and Frank Leland, 1528 Pratt boulevard, said to be a partner of Osborne.

HUSBAND MART LANDS IN COURT; WIFE BRINGS SUIT

Mrs. Wakefield Asked to Pay $30,000.

Oakland, Cal., Aug. 26.—Suit for $30,000 damages against Mrs. Edith Huntington Wakefield, divorced wife of the late John D. Spreckels Jr., capitalist, for the alleged alienation of the affections of her husband, Rodney Kendrick, newspaper artist, was filed by Mrs. Nell Kendrick here today. Mrs. Kendrick also filed suit for divorce, alleging misconduct as a result of her husband's acquaintance with Mrs. Wakefield. She asked $100 a month alimony.

Troubles of Recent Origin.

The suits were the outcome of incidents in the Wakefield home at Sausalito and elsewhere wherein Mrs. Wakefield was alleged to have urged Mrs. Kendrick to divorce her husband on the understanding that she and her 14 months old daughter June would be well provided for.

The alleged relations between Kendrick and Mrs. Wakefield began July 4, 1922, and continued intermittently to Aug. 20, according to the divorce complaint.

Hospital Trip Costs Her Husband.

Mrs. Wakefield "became infatuated" with Kendrick in March of this year and sought by "arts, artifices and other means" to win him, according to the alienation complaint. On March 15, the plaintiff, by reason of her physical condition, went to a hospital in Stockton, Cal., and remained there until Aug. 1, "during which time the defendant lavished her affection and love" on Kendrick, the complaint continues.

"In June the defendant persuaded the plaintiff's husband to leave his home in Oakland and go to her home in Sausalito and thereafter he ceased to be interested in condition of plaintiff," Mrs. Kendrick's complaint adds.

SPEEDING AUTO HITS GIRL; SHE'S PROBABLY TO DIE

Witnesses told the police that Peter Ceamarata's car was traveling at excessive speed when it hit Miss Corinne Nelson, 16 years old, at North Oakley and Foster avenues last night. The girl probably will die. She lives at 3240 Foster avenue and Ceamarata at 1615 North Wells street. He is held.

Miraculous was the escape from death of Walter N. Sears, wealthy Barrington man, and his nephew, Roy Sears of Sioux Falls, S. D., when their car was set looping the loop by a speeding Chicago and Northwestern train at Hough street crossing yesterday morning. They sustained only bruises, though the car was wrecked.

YOUTH SOUGHT AFTER ATTACK ON GIRL NEAR 'L'

An alleged moron, known to his victim as "Jimmy" or "Stanley," is being sought following the tale related yesterday by Mary Rye, 13 years old, 1638 West Erie street.

The unconscious form of the little girl was found in the shadows under the elevated structure near Claremont and North avenues by passersby. At the station, when she had been revived, Mary told of being seized by the boy, who darted out from the shadows under the elevated when she passed on her way home. She was dragged to a darker spot farther from the street, and when she had become unconscious after struggling with him, she was attacked.

AIRCRAFT FLEET TO REPEL RUM INVASION BY AIR

Dry Agents Say Wets Come in Planes.

New York, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Aircraft is being employed extensively by bootleggers in bringing liquor into New York city, it was admitted tonight by Zone Chief John D. Appleby, in charge of the general agents in New York state and New Jersey. He added that serious consideration is being given by the prohibition department to the use of airplanes and seaplanes in trailing rum runners.

An aircraft fleet to supplement the activities of the "prohibition navy" and the efforts of the agents on land, Chief Appleby said, would come pretty near to cutting off all the bootleg supply of liquors.

The expense of the aircraft station is one thing that has caused a hesitancy on the part of the prohibition officials to inaugurate this service in and around New York, although it has been tried out successfully in Florida waters by Stanley E. Hubbard, chief of the air service of the prohibition department.

Eleven Rum Running Planes.

Information has reached federal authorities that no fewer than eleven airplanes are making regular trips between Long Island points and Canada. The trip, it was said, could be made in four or five hours. Usually the machines land on Long Island early in the morning or in the evening just before dark. The pilots of these "rum running" planes try to find a new landing place on each trip, so as to avoid detection by the federal agents.

The system so far has worked out without a single capture being reported. Trucks arrive on the landing field about the time the airplane alights and the cargo, consisting of thirty to forty cases of liquor, is quickly whisked away.

Big Profit in Booze.

Forty cases of rye whisky cost in Canada $1,200 or $1,500, according to to prohibition agents, while in this country it is readily taken up at $100 a case, or $4,000. The air pilots probably receive $500 a trip, official believe.

The eleven planes would bring in during a month about 13,000 cases of whisky, which would be worth at bootleg prices $1,300,000.

Four seaplanes also are said to be owned and operated by bootleggers around New York city for the purpose of keeping incoming rum runners advised of the movements of the "prohibition navy" boats.

"BORROWS" CAR FOR BRIDAL TRIP TO CROWN POINT

"My sister, Ruth, wanted to be married to George Baines, 5327 Kimbark avenue, so we just 'borrowed' the car to go to Crown Point with."

This was the story told to Sergt. William McMullin of the detective bureau yesterday when he went to Hartford City, Ind., to bring back to Chicago, Marvin Steed, 5218 Cornell avenue, arrested there with his sister, Ruth, 18, and Jeanette King, 5218 Cornell avenue, on a charge of stealing the automobile of N. A. Reinert, manager of the Cooper-Carlton hotel, on Aug. 11.

"We were out walking," the boy said. "Ruth and 'Red' decided to be married. So we just borrowed this auto to go to Crown Point. But we got there too late, and 'Red' came back home. Ruth and I and Jeanette have been driving all around ever since.

"When we got here to Hartford City, where my father used to live and stayed here a few days, they arrested us; and that's all there is to it."

LACK OF PARLOR BIG PROBLEM OF GIRL ROOMERS

Most Must Receive Men in Sleeping Quarters.

"No, we ain't got no public parlor for you to see your sweetie in. What's a bedroom for?"

And the fat woman in the sleazy wrapper and faded blue "mob" cap, slammed the door of the small, third floor cubicle, and ushered out the young girl who was in search of a "nice room, not too expensive."

To many a girl living in a Chicago rooming house, "home means any place where she can unpack her trunk, anchor her electric iron and hang her "other" blouse over a chair.

More for Better Conditions.

But home should mean more, even in a rooming house, according to the housing committee of the council of social agencies, and to other women interested in girls' work. It should mean opportunity to entertain one's men friends until a reasonable hour without being forced to the street or the bedroom, they maintain.

Lack of the public parlor in the modern rooming house is responsible for many a tragedy that brings a girl into the Morals court, according to Mrs. Julia McGuire, court worker.

A survey of the "Housing of Non-Family Women," prepared recently by the Community Trust, and used in connection with the housing committee of the council of social agencies reveals the lack of a public parlor.

Parlor Privileges Few.

More than half of the 300 places visited in rooming house sections on the north, south and west sides, granted the privilege of entertaining men guests in the bedrooms. Only fifty of the landladies interviewed said the girls might ever have use of the parlor. One-third of the householders stated that young women could not have men call in the house.

Yesterday a TRIBUNE investigator canvassed the rooming houses that line one of the streets west of State street from Chicago avenue to the park.

The first four or five landladies were more interested in finance than society. "Pay your money and we don't care what you do," was their implied answer to the question of gentlemen callers.

The owner of a large rooming house in the 1100 block shouted in a nasal tone, "Let 'em meet 'em outside. That's what I say. Why the devil should I have a parlor for them when I can rent it out for $10 a week?"

This Householder Listless.

Next door the householder was listless, but encouraging as she leaned on her broom, "Company in your room? Well, just according."

The colored maid in a house near Elm street was steering the prospective roomer adroitly by the two unmade beds, the bottles and the hunks of bread littering the floor of what had been the parlor, as she explained, "No, miss, we ain't got no parlor, but we allows gentlemen in the room if you all watch your step. We've asked out more girls for boldness."

The twelfth landlady suggested that the girl had to keep her door open. The next four didn't care, apparently, what happened, so long as the men didn't wait in the hall for the girl. There was no parlor in any of the houses.

In the entire canvass from Chicago avenue to Lincoln park but one public parlor was found. A motherly woman who had "once been a girl and wanted to look out for other girls," smiled as she showed the very private public parlor in which she urged her girls "to entertain their friends just as if you were home."

since their return from Saranac lake, but it was only yesterday morning that she told him Bergen had assaulted her there, after inducing her to drink.

"Cline and Mrs. Cline both telephoned to Bergen after she had told her story yesterday," the prosecutor said, "urging him to come to Edgewater to clear up the situation. When he arrived, Mrs. Cline, in the presence of her two brothers, her husband and Bergen, repeated the story.

"He attempted to justify his act by alleging that all women are traitors, Cline said, and then the husband told him he would have to fight it out."

Woman Is Given Freedom.

Prosecutor Hart ordered the release of Mrs. Cline and her brothers. She and her brothers corroborated Cline's amended story.

A search of the Cline house today revealed the bullet which killed Bergen. It was from a .45 Colt automatic. Entering Bergen's left breast, it had fractured the spinal cord and gone through the second floor bedroom door, which had been closed.

The prisoner's father, James Cline of Philadelphia, said to be a wealthy retired butcher, today sent him the following telegram: "Will spare no expense to see you receive justice. Arrive tonight."

Latvia Gains Notch in Naval Race; Now Has 1 Warship

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

RIGA, Aug. 26.—Latvia's navy is no longer the world's smallest. Today the president raised the flag over the first Lettish warship, a former German destroyer, which was sunk while attacking Riga and which the Letts salvaged.

Delayed by Storm

Horse races attracted the majority of the visitors at the opening of he Chi-Cook fair, held at the Checkerboard flying field, Maywood, yesterday.

Although numerous vast circus tents were up on the grounds, they were for the most part empty of exhibits. The storm that wrought damage throughout Chicago earlier in the week, officials said, set the fair back at least forty-eight hours, despite their efforts. They promised that the show would go on as scheduled until its closing, Sept. 4.

The American Legion, which was to have put on an elaborate program yesterday, was handicapped and postponed their day at the fair until next Friday.

Among the exhibits that had been completed in time for the opening was one of farm produce, another of automobiles, and several of live stock.

Two Youths Sent to Jail Following Girl's Suicide

Rockford, Ill., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Disclosures made at the inquest into the death of Betty Small, 18, who ended her life Monday night by leaping into the Rock river, resulted in the arrest today of four persons whom she accompanied on an automobile trip to Monroe, Wis., last Saturday night.

Ralph Hickox, 21, and Vernon Watts, 22, were given jail sentences of six months each on a charge of transporting liquor. Mrs. Ralph Hickox, 18, faces a charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor girl, and Elizabeth Pollins, 16, is charged with delinquency.

Suicide in a fit of despondency was the verdict of the coroner's jury.

Orphan Newsy, Accused of Theft, Paroled to Woman

Charles Kaufman, 17, orphan newsboy, was discharged and paroled to Mrs. Kate Cohen, 322 East 15th street, yesterday when arraigned before Judge Charles A. Williams in the Boys' court on a charge of stealing clothing from Louis Pollock, 350 East 48th street. The boy testified that Pollock's son, Fred, had offered to give him the clothing.

HOSPITALS FACE U. S. INQUIRY IN USE OF DRUGS

'English Heiress' Tells of Treatments.

Federal narcotic agents yesterday announced that a sweeping investigation of hospital practice in the treating of dope addicts will result from circumstances surrounding the case of Mrs. Mabel Rockwell Schaeffer, "English heiress," taken into custody Friday in a raid on an alleged drug den at 2223 South Dearborn street.

In a statement to agents, Mrs. Schaeffer told of the quantities of drugs she has received while under hospital treatment. If her statements are found to be true, agents say, the government will show violation of federal laws in the administration of dope by institutions.

Statement by Hospital.

At the Illinois General hospital, where Mrs. Schaeffer recently received treatment, it was stated that Mrs. Schaeffer was given narcotics in small quantities, but not of sufficient amount to satisfy her cravings.

Officials of the hospital stated there could be no question regarding their procedure in the matter and pointed to the fact that one of the hospital nurses had been instrumental in revealing Mrs. Schaeffer's means of obtaining drugs through Negro drug peddlers.

Money from Bunte.

Sergt. Schaeffer, husband of the "heiress," yesterday was inclined to doubt the existence of his wife's "English estate," from which she supposedly has been receiving money regularly. These sums invariably came through Oscar C. Bunte, millionaire candy manufacturer, represented to the husband as Mrs. Schaeffer's "guardian and adviser in financial matters," according to Schaeffer.

It is said that Mrs. Schaeffer and Bunte have been close friends for more than three years.

SEEK MISSING MAN HERE.

Chicago police were asked yesterday to search for Amiel Speier of Philadelphia, who left home Aug. 17 to work in Chicago as a car inspector.

POSES AS LOST BOY, SO FATHER HAS HIM NABBED

Search of M. J. Terranova, wealthy St. Petersburg, Fla., contractor, for his son, Joseph, 15 years old, yesterday led to the arrest of Edgar Galligo, 18, 814 West Division street, by Sergts. John Murphy and Anthony McSwiggin of the detective bureau on charges of attempted extortion.

JOSEPH TERRANOVA.

Young Terranova disappeared from San Leon college in Paco county, Florida, two years ago. It was said the boy went away with a man known as Ben Fry, who filled the lad's head with lurid detective stories and represented himself to be a secret service man.

Recently the father received a letter in answer to an advertisement he inserted in a detective magazine purporting to be from his son and advising him to send money to Galligo. Instead the father came to Chicago, and when Galligo acted suspiciously, told the detective bureau his story. Detectives last night were searching for the boy.

Raid Moonshine Still and Arrest Two Men

Englewood police yesterday raided an alleged "moonshine distillery" at 7236 South Wood street, seized two large "stills," six 100-pound sacks of sugar, and arrested Michael Delorto and James Rent.

HALL SILENT ON POLITICS CHARGE ON CITY LIGHTS

No Retort to Demands of Citizens' Body.

No reply was received yesterday by the Citizens' association to its charges in connection with the awarding of a contract for the extension of the city's lighting system. Nor was George E. Carlson, city electrician, found at his office yesterday morning.

The voters approved on June 5 a bond issue of $2,000,000 for the street lighting scheme. In appealing for popular approval, Mr. Carlson promised that the money would be spent with care.

Carlson's Pledge.

"I pledge the public," he then said, "that these lamps (about 13,000) will be put in only where they are needed. By needed, I mean localities where streets are paved or where not more than 30 per cent of the property is vacant.

"Current to operate them will be purchased from the sanitary district at less than half the amount the city pays for current from the Commonwealth Edison company."

More Promises.

He further promised that "not one cent of this money will be used to further the plans of large holders of vacant real estate." He added: "The approval of the electric light bond issue at the June election should appeal to every public spirited citizen."

One of the charges of the Citizens' association is that two of the four bidders were "put forward by political backers and that each is depending largely upon political influence to obtain the contract."

BLACK HAND BOMB WRECKS DOORWAY IN "LITTLE ITALY"

The "Black Hand" is charged by the police with responsibility for a time bomb which early yesterday exploded in the doorway of a three story tenement house at 1156 Larrabee street, in the heart of "Little Italy."

The front door of the building was ripped from its hinges, windows were shattered, and mail boxes in the hallway were torn off, the total damage being estimated at $500.

In the building reside Frank De Vito, his wife and four children on the first floor; Tony Romano, wife and one child on the second floor; Joe Salvagio, wife and four children on the top floor, and Mrs. Anna Vocavoin in the basement. The men declared they knew of no reason why they should have been the objects of the bomb.

HAWAIIAN WHO STOLE $1,000,000 GIVEN 5 YEARS

HONOLULU, T. H., Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—John Guild, former treasurer of Alexander & Baldwin, sugar factors and shippers, pleaded guilty today to two charges of embezzlement and was sentenced to "not less than five years and not more than ten years at hard labor" on each count. The sentences are to run concurrently.

Although Guild was specifically charged with embezzlement, only two amounts, $37,500 from Alexander & Baldwin and $39,000 from the Protestant Episcopal Church Corporation of Hawaii, of which he also was treasurer, it was said by directors of Alexander & Baldwin that his shortages would amount to approximately $1,000,000.

Add Bars on U. S. Lines as Booze Business Grows

New York, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—The liquor business of the United States, conducted only on the high seas, of course, has been increasing by leaps and bounds since Adolphus Busch of St. Louis wrote President Harding calling the government the "biggest bootlegger in the world."

In the days before Busch's letter the liner America had one bar, which did a modest business. Today it has two bars and both of them are so overworked that it was announced that when it sails it will have three bars. The third bar will be for steerage passengers only.

858 JOINS 1922 IN CELEBRATING LINCOLN DEBATE

Freeport City of Contrasts on Anniversary.

BY WALTER RODERICK.

Freeport, Ill., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Freeport turned back a sixty-four year page in its history today to celebrate with pageants, parade, oratory and song the anniversary of the second debate which occurred here between Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas in 1858.

It was a day of contrasts calculated to impress upon the mind of both participant and spectator, as nothing else could do, the great changes in customs, costumes, politics and thought which bridge the gap between ante-slavery days and those that follow prohibition.

20,000 Attend Celebration.

Fully 25,000 persons came here from Freeport, Winnebago and other nearby communities to hear orators of the two great political parties as they did in the days of Lincoln and Douglas but the mode of travel was different.

In its account of that famous debate, a newspaper published on the Monday morning the Friday upon which the debates were delivered, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE considered it of enough importance to stress in italics the fact that a train of "sixteen cars" had brought "over 1,000 persons" here from Marengo, Rockford and Belvidere. Today the well known flivver and the interurban outdid the trains.

Then there were the costumes. Bewhiskered old women, who heard the famous debate, mincing their way down the streets in the broad hoop skirts, gay bonnets, and dainty black slippers of ante-bellum ballroom days beside the athletic stride of the modern girl in knickers and the shimmying middle of skirted sister.

Stove Pipes Re-Appear.

There was the old gentleman in the stove pipe hat, high collar, and thick black surf and the civil war veteran with his dusty uniform and medals, the dandyboy and the "rah" with striped stripes, the traveling salesman from Chicago with bell bottomed trousers.

And then there was the white haired old Negro woman who rode in the parade and never once smiled in acknowledgment of the applause that greeted the sign she carried: "Lincoln freed me." More jovial seemed the old blind horse which rode on a truck drawn by a tractor and hung his head over a forward reading, "Henry Ford freed me."

Then there was the difference in political thought as exemplified by Carl C. Schuyler, Republican orator of Denver, Colo., and United States Senator Byron Patton ("Pat") Harrison of Mississippi. Mr. Schuyler eulogized Lincoln and applied the principles he enunciated to present day politics.

Senator Harrison was presented with the more difficult task of analyzing the principles of the "Little Giant" and making his creed fit the needs of today. He also spoke of some things the Harding administration has failed to do to his satisfaction of the Democratic party, including tardiness in using the "big stick" in the railroad strike.

Asks Immigration Bars.

Mr. Schuyler declared that although the nation is not threatened with disintegration through sectionalism as in the days of Lincoln but faces just as serious a problem through spiritual disunion as expressed in the strike habit.

Asks Immigration Bars.

He stayed that brand of "political democracy that quails before the ballot of organized labor," and declared what most needed today is just what Lincoln asked for in his day, a 100 per cent American electorate. This, he said, can be brought about only by further restrictions being placed on the immigration of illiterates and the deportation of those already here.

Senator Harrison deplored the usurpation of state police powers by the federal government, declared the states need to elect more fearless executives, and announced he would never vote for any measure looking towards the punishment by the federal government of the authorities of Williamson county. This, he said, is a matter for the voters and the state itself to handle.

Tonight on a stage erected as closely as possible to the site of the pile of lumber from which the two great orators conducted their debate, a pageant was given in the original costumes of 1858, ending with the unshackling of a former negro slave by Boyhood Lincoln, as portrayed by the Rev. John R. Pickells, rector of the Grace Episcopal church. The part of Douglas was played by Stephen A. Douglas, a local real estate man who claims kinship to the former senator.

TWO WILLS LEFT BY LORD NORTHCLIFFE BRING LEGAL BATTLE

[Copyright: 1922: By the New York Times.]

LONDON, Aug. 26.—There is to be a fight over Lord Northcliffe's will and three caveats have been entered against its probate, Lord Riddell's News of the World announces tonight.

One of them is entered by Henry Preuss Arnholz and Sir George Sutton, who are executors and trustees of the will dated March 22, 1919, and four codicils, dated June 13, 1919, June 23, 1920, Oct. 8, 1921, and April 27, 1922. Arnholz is the solicitor and an old acquaintance of Northcliffe. Sir George Sutton is chairman of the Amalgamated Press and one of Northcliffe's oldest friends and colleagues.

It appears, says the News of the World, that shortly before Lord Northcliffe's death he executed another will of which Lady Northcliffe is the sole executrix. No information has been published concerning the contents of these various documents, but it is rumored Lady Northcliffe is the chief beneficiary under them all. Presumably the two sets of testaments differ in other respects.

A writ of summons has been issued, thus commencing a suit to determine which papers shall be admitted to probate.

The first will codicil is being put forward on the ground that the testator was of unsound mind at the time when the second will was executed and this will have to be decided by court should the case proceed. The court will no doubt appoint an administrator pendente lite to watch over the estate pending decision.

TRIBUNE FINDS CHICAGO GIRL 'LOST IN IRELAND'

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

DUBLIN, Aug. 26.—[By Tribune Wireless.]—Katherine Behan of Chicago, secretary to County Clerk Robert M. Sweitzer, is safe, according to a message reaching THE TRIBUNE'S Dublin bureau tonight from Kilrush, County Clare, where she had been visiting relatives for a month.

Kilrush is isolated by cut wires and rails and her friends in Chicago, not hearing from her, became alarmed. Father McInerney of Kilrush sent a message in reply to a TRIBUNE inquiry concerning Miss Behan by a courier to Ennis, from where it was relayed here by wire.

It is understood that she left on the Olympic for New York last Wednesday.

"Poor" Cripple Offers Cop $5 Day for Begging Rights

Professional begging cost John Brook, 61 years old, and minus an arm and a leg, $10 and costs in Judge John Richardson's court yesterday.

"I'm a poor man . . ." began Brook, but he was interrupted by Policeman Schultz, who arrested him.

"Poor nothing," the policeman said, "he offered me $5 a day to let him beg on Wells street, after I had repeatedly warned him to leave."

DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS LOADED.

Chester Drzyski, 19, 8802 Escanaba avenue, was accidentally shot yesterday by Frank Rasevics, also 19, 8758 Muskegon avenue, who told the police he didn't know it was loaded.

AUTO CHARGE DISMISSED.

Nathan Schaefer, arrested when his automobile turned over while he was attempting to flee after striking another machine, was dismissed yesterday in the Maxwell street police court.

WOMAN'S DEATH IN "BATTLE" AT PIER HELD ACCIDENTAL

A coroner's jury, investigating the death of Mrs. Evelyn Tamm, 2139 South Trumbull avenue, who was shot during a military exhibition on the Municipal pier during the Pageant of Progress, yesterday returned a verdict of accidental death.

CAPT. C. A. KRAFT.

The jury decided that Mrs. Tamm, while a passenger on the steamship Christopher Columbus, had been struck by a "tracer" bullet fired from one of the machine guns of the 202d anti-aircraft battery, but declined to fix any responsibility.

The principal witnesses at the inquest were Capts. Charles A. Kraft and R. E. Davis, in charge of the guns used in the exhibition.

The captain explained that the machine guns were demonstrating the repulsing of an airplane attack at night, and that the soldiers were firing at an airplane 2,000 feet in the air.

FATHER DIES AS DAUGHTER RIDES ON SAME TRAIN

Charles R. Beck, 65 years old, 1516 East 64th street, died yesterday on a homeward bound Illinois Central suburban train while in another coach of the same train, unconscious that he was aboard, rode his daughter, Elsie, 20 years old.

Miss Beck knew nothing of the death until the train was stopped at the 55th street station and the police removed the body. As the train pulled out of the station, however, she remembered that her father, who was suffering from heart disease, usually rode that train on Saturdays, and at the 57th street station she got off and went back, to be confronted by the body.

SUICIDE'S HAT IS IDENTIFIED AS THAT OF TALCOTT

Wife, However, Will Not Believe He Is Dead.

Further evidence that William W. Talcott, nemesis of the love cult of "Dr." Albert Moore, 142 East Ontario street, was the man who leaped to his death into the lake from the steamer Favorite on last Thursday night was developed yesterday when a south side haberdasher identified the suicide's hat as that sold by him to Talcott on June 17.

Lawrence Daida, 6650 South Halsted street, the haberdasher, declared the hat is precisely similar to one of two he purchased from Portis Brothers, Franklin and Van Buren streets. To prove his assertion, he produced the second hat, which happened to be still in his stock.

Mrs. Shirley P. Talcott, Talcott's wife, however, does not hold the almost general belief that it was her husband who leaped from the steamer.

Made Insanity Charge.

Mrs. Talcott was released from the psychopathic hospital on the same day her husband disappeared. Her brief incarceration had been brought about by Mr. Talcott, who had declared to police he believed his wife's mind had been affected by her infatuation for the teachings of "Dr." Moore.

As she sat in the Talcott home at 637 East Marquette road last night hoping for the return of her husband, she based her main hopes on the belief that he is still alive on the fact that several months ago he mysteriously disappeared for a time following a quarrel between them.

Charles R. Talcott, 124 East Marquette road, father of the missing man, stated it as his firm belief that the victim of the steamer Favorite was his son. The young man's mother is said to be prostrated.

Feared for His Mind.

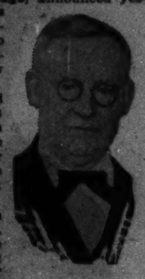
Dr. James Whitney Hall, alienist, yesterday revealed that Mrs. Talcott, the wife, consulted him some time ago concerning her husband.

"She believed at the time that Mr. Talcott was not in his right mind," said Dr. Hall. "She came back to see me today. She asserts she is not by any means convinced that her husband killed himself in the lake."

Capt. John Anderson, commander of the coast guard, ceased efforts to retrieve the body yesterday. The water is too deep at the point where the death leap occurred, he said, to admit of results with grappling hooks. The condition of the water is such, however, that, according to the captain, the body will come to the surface in a few days.

None of the relatives of the missing man hold the positive view of Mr. Dsida that the suicide's hat belonged to Mr. Talcott. Chief among the dissenters was Byron Talcott, a 7 year old son. He said he was certain the hat was not his father's, as it had too narrow a band.

CUSTOMS OFFICIAL HERE TO WASHINGTON TO DISCUSS TARIFF



JOHN FORD.

John Ford, assistant collector of customs for Chicago, announced yesterday that he is leaving for Washington today to confer with officials on the new tariff bill.

Mr. Ford said that importers are bringing in 50 per cent more goods this year than were brought in last year.

"The reason for this, I think, is because of the present tariff and the looming up of the new tariff which will increase the duty on almost everything imported here," said Mr. Ford. "The importers are bringing in merchandise in great quantities now, presumably to avoid the higher tariff."

REVELL IN PARIS RAPS EXHIBITS OF NUDE WOMEN

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, Aug. 26.—"The chief hope of saving Austria seems to lie in the country being absorbed or its affairs administered by neighbor states," said Alexander Revell of Chicago, who is sailing on the Maurstania after spending several months in central Europe, particularly at Carlsbad.

"I think that Austria could be quickly pulled out of the abyss with real help. The country has many excellent industries which still are capable of producing quantities of high grade goods and there is a market for these goods. I did not go to Vienna because the country is too full now of foreigners, who are certain to be a burden to the state."

His only criticism of Europe is the exhibitions of nude women. He says he never met an American who really enjoyed such sights. He admitted he had attended the Folies Bergere, but added he probably would not do so again.

Mr. Revell wished Chicago handled its street traffic as well as Paris, where there is no speed limit and the least possible regulations.

G. O. P. Names Women to Lead in Fall Campaign

Work for the Republican women of Illinois in the fall campaign was outlined yesterday when Miss Anne Forsythe, executive secretary of the Republican Woman"s organization of Illinois, announced the appointment of the following district chairmen: Mrs. John T. Mason, Aurora, 11; Mrs. James Barnes, Rockford, 12; Mrs. Douglas Harvey, Dixon, 13; Mrs. Charles A. Clark, Sherrard, 14; Mrs. L. H. Dennisson, Galesburg, 15; Mrs. W. W. Whitmore, Bloomington, 17; Mrs. Newton Cooley, Brocton, 18; Mrs. Henry M. Dunlap, Savoy, 19; Mrs. John J. Reeve, Jacksonville, 20; Miss Sallie Pirkins, Springfield, 21; Mrs. Robert J. Boylan, East St. Louis, 22; Mrs. George E. McMahon, Olney, 23.

REJECTED ON EVE OF 3D MARRIAGE, WANTS $25,000

Rejected on the eve of her wedding, and deserted in their "honeymoon apartment," Mrs. Hazel Cordes Olsen, divorcee, yesterday filed the praecipe in a suit for $25,000 damages against her former fiancé, Arthur Wills, 3445 Newcastle avenue. Wills is an engineer for the Western Electric company.

The marriage, according to Attorney Philip R. Davis, counsel for Mrs. Olsen, was to have been the culmination of a childhood romance, which persisted through Mrs. Olsen's two previous marriages, although the couple had not seen each other for more than eight years.

Divorce Two Husbands.

Mrs. Olsen, now 22 years old, was divorced in December, 1918, from Ralph Johnston, whom she charged with extreme and repeated cruelty. In 1920 she married Ludwig Olsen, and within a few months divorced him, charging that he had beaten her.

Responsibility for the wreck of her latest romance is placed upon young Wills' mother by Mrs. Olsen, who intimated that she might cause suit for slander to be filed against Mrs. Wills.

"He had bought the license," said Mrs. Olsen, "and that afternoon, I went to our 'honeymoon' flat to complete arrangements. He was to meet me there and we were to go to the Austin Presbyterian church for the ceremony.

"After several hours he came accompanied by his brother. 'I suppose you've come for your things,' I said in a bantering way.

First Guess Correct.

"'Right,' he answered, and without further ado began to pack his things into a trunk. I haven't seen him since.

"We have known each other for eight years," continued the girl, "and we were sweethearts in school together, but we drifted apart. Recently he became attentive to me again, but I would not listen to his proposals until the time imposed upon me by the divorce decree had expired. Then I accepted him."

Meyer's Neck Not Broken, X-Ray Pictures Show

Edward Meyer, 1204 Asbury avenue, Evanston, son of Fred Meyer, wealthy tobacco importer, supposed to have broken his neck a week ago when he dived from a platform, was examined at the Evanston hospital yesterday by physicians and was found to have suffered merely a severe strain of the muscles. An X-ray picture was taken and this showed that no vertebra had been broken. Meyer later in the day was taken back to his home.

HURLEY ACTS TO CITE RIGHEIMER FOR CONTEMPT

Will Quiz Judge on Vote Fraud Talk.

Appointment by Judge Timothy D. Hurley of Attorney Cameron Latter as "friend of the court," to investigate remarks attributed to County Judge Frank Righeimer, with a view toward possible contemut proceedings, and the issuance of statements and counter-statements featured yesterday's phase of the clash between the two jurists resulting from the release of convicted election clerks on writs of habeas corpus by Judge Hurley.

Attorney Latter was ordered to present the result of his investigation to Judge Hurley on Sept. 19, at which time it is predicted that Judge Righeimer will be cited to show cause why he should not be held in contempt of court for commenting on a pending case.

Makes Righeimer "Happy."

"I am happier today than I have been in a long time because of the fact that Judge Hurley has entered this order," said Judge Righeimer.

"I have publicly stated the conditions to the people of Cook county," continued Judge Righeimer, "and as they have a right to know the facts, I have given them the facts.

"For fifty years the women have been laboring to obtain the right of suffrage, and a few crooks in a few precincts deprive them of that right to share in the government. I welcome the pitiless light of publicity. Anybody who undertakes to erect any barrier or breastworks to protect these election thieves while I am county judge will receive the punishment which the law provides.

"Protects Court's Dignity."

"It is not intended to erect any 'breastworks,'" declared Judge Hurley, when notified of Judge Righeimer's statement, "or any other rhetorical defenses in favor of ballot thieves or other classes of lawbreakers. It merely takes the ordinary commonplace way of protecting the dignity of a court of justice—appointment of an arbiter to inquire into the facts."

"Without descending to a personal controversy with Judge Righeimer," continued Judge Hurley, "it strikes one rather forcibly that there is in his public statement a hint of a strong desire on the part of that jurist to assume the rôle of martyr to the cause of pure elections—possibly with one judicial eye fixed upon the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November next."

Stampede in Street Car Follows Ignition of Grease

Blowing out of a fuse in an Elston avenue street car operated by Motorman Charles Burns yesterday morning caused a near panic among women passengers. The car stopped suddenly at Lake and Franklin streets. A grease box became ignited and the car was filled with smoke. Girls and women became excited and started to scramble for the doors. Arrival of fire apparatus averted a serious crush.

REV. WILLIAMSON WAXES INDIGNANT OVER VICE FACTS

Rev. Williamson, "commissioner" of the "Department of Law Enforcement," is anxious to know who sent him a list of seven vice resorts Friday, with striking details about each place. He is peeved that he does not know the identity of his informants and said that it looked like "plain cowardice" on their part.

However, he thanked the committee of citizens and detective agency for their work and sent the list to the police department.

His statement continues:

"This committee of citizens is entitled to know what the police department does with their reports. If such committee or detective agency will inform me where I can reach them by correspondence, I will be glad to keep them informed of progress according to my promise to the public of Chicago when I accepted my office last February—viz.: I will enforce the law or let the people know where the fault lies.

"I feel, however, that while I covet the help of this committee and detective agency and agree with their undercover methods of getting evidence, when it comes to letting the people know who you are—then—the place is out in the open, and it looks like plain cowardice to be hiding identity. Let your names be known in this matter, with just as much frankness as you have named some big vice lords."

NEBRASKA POLITICIAN OFFERS HELP TO PUT OVER GUMP CAMPAIGN

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Tom Dennison, widely known Omaha politician, has come to the aid of Andy Gump.

For instance, when the secretary of the Chimney Sweeps' union calls on Andy for a slice of the $50,000 in exchange for the union's votes, Andy will be fortified with the proper advice.

Mr. Dennison knows Cartoonist Smith and is going to dictate 100 of his interesting experiences for Andy's use. They are the result of forty-five years' experience in western politics.

"If he doesn't watch his step, he won't have enough left of the $50,000 by snow time to buy a bean sandwich," said Mr. Dennison.

MAC MILLAN ON WAY WITH MORE ARCTIC SECRETS

Frozen In 8 Months, He Explores 2,000 Miles.

Here we found a large settlement of Eskimos.

Take Eskimos' Advice.

The Eskimos asserted that there were no safe winter quarters along that coast, and strongly advised us to give up plans for the establishment of winter quarters near the magnetic north pole, which I was reluctant to do.

However, we took the advice of the Eskimos, and again turned westward across Fox channel, intending to try the passage of the strait. But it was blocked by solid pack ice at 83 west longtitude. Progress was impossible. There was danger of freezing in the pack for the winter.

Retreat was the only course. We proceeded in an easterly direction to the western shores of Baffin Land, and turned south.

We selected the harbor I have named Bowdoin after the most painstaking examination of every bay and inlet along the coast. On Nov. 9 we were settled for the winter.

Spend a Busy Winter.

We were not idle at Bowdoin Harbor. Under the superintendence of Prof. Goddard of Dartmouth college and Carnegie institute, we built a magnetic observatory, and carried on for a period of ten months an uninterrupted observation of terrestrial magnetism. We took meteorological observations throughout the year.

The lowest temperature recorded was 60 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit.

For two months we took tidal observations.

Moreover, my men with dog teams traveled more than 2,000 miles, going north to Cape Dorchester, south and east to Lake Harbor and inward to Amadjaak lake, a body of water which had never hitherto been explored by white men.

We found the land very different from the current delineations on the latest maps. Nearly all points are incorrect, astronomically.

A Land White with Geese.

The waters of Chorbak inlet reach nearly to Fox channel. We discovered a land of uncharted lakes, the breeding place for innumerable ducks, geese, swan and shore birds. Here also lay the hitherto undiscovered home of the lesser snow goose and the blue goose.

Eskimos gave us vivid descriptions of an area of about 625 square miles, so white with geese that the land appears as if it were covered with snow.

I have recorded fifty species of birds, and have a good collection of bird skins and eggs. Prof. Robinson has a fine botanical collection of sixty flowering arctic plants. We are bringing a collection of rocks for the petrological department at Washington.

Late in July we began to think of home. The ice was breaking. On the first day of August, the Bowdoin was free. We had a fine run through Hudson strait. Fortunately we escaped a big gale between the 14th and 16th of this month. We had good weather down the Labrador coast, which was packed with ice as far south as 57 north latitude.

MEXICO'S DREAM OF UPLIFT FADES IN SMOKE OF WAR

Mexico City, Aug. 26.—The total income of the Mexican government, as reported by the treasury, was for the first five months of the present year, including the oil tax, $45,000,000. Of this almost $7,500,000 was for back oil taxes.

Of the $45,000,000 of income for the first five months of the present year $23,000,000 went to the maintenance of the army. As the revolutionary disturbances have increased since then throughout the country it is fair to assert that the expense of the maintenance of the war department for the remaining seven months of the year will increase.

The estimated income for the present year, made last December, was $180,000,000, twice that actually attained during the first five months of the current year. As a result, the budgets of all the departments of the government, with the one exception of that of war, have been cut down, most of them from forty to fifty per cent. This has pressed hard on the departments which count for the progress and uplifting of the country, still suffering from the disastrous effects of ten years' revolution.

The actual expenditure of the department of education during the period in question was only $3,845,000.

BEER AND WINE IS A N. Y. ISSUE; 50 WETS NEEDED

Women Join Fight to End "Rule of Despots."

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

New York, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—The movement to restore beer and light wines through modification of the Volstead act is becoming a major issue in the congressional election in New York.

It will not figure prominently in the contest over the senatorship, for Senator Calder, slated for renomination by the Republicans, has voted "wet" generally in the senate and presumably a "wet" candidate will be nominated by the Democrats.

There will be no wet plank in the Republican platform, however, according to Republican leaders, and there is considerable doubt that one will be adopted by the Democratic state convention, though there is a strong Democratic movement for a declaration in favor of beer and light wines.

Fight for Lower House.

When it comes to congressmen, however, there will be dry and wet candidates in a majority of the districts and sharp fighting between the anti-saloon league forces and the new Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, which is working for immediate liberalization of the Volstead act and eventual repeal of the eighteenth amendment. The association believes that the replacement of fifty dry congressmen with wets in the approaching election will swing the house to legislation restoring beer and wine.

She's a Professor's Wife.

In New York City there still is a prevalent attitude of astonishment and resentment that prohibition could be imposed on the metropolis by the hicks in that vaguely defined region beyond the Hudson, which the New Yorkers now recall is included by the school geography within the boundaries of the United States.

"So you are from that part of the country which took away our cocktails," said the wife of a university professor, fixing me with a somewhat baleful eye.

"To which I enter a plea in avoidance," I replied. "Didn't the state of New York also ratify the eighteenth amendment?"

"O, I'm sure it did not," replied the lady. "You must be mistaken."

What Association Seeks.

The association against prohibition is sure of carrying New York City, and is devoting its efforts mainly to the dry districts upstate. The association stresses the statement that it accepts no contributions from brewers or distillers, says its books are open to inspection by any one, and proclaims this slogan:

"Beer and light wines NOW, but no saloons EVER."

A novel feature of the work of the association in New York is the organization of a "Molly Pitcher" club of women to aid the movement for modification of the Volstead act. The club is headed by Miss Alice Carpenter, suffrage leader, and among other members of the executive committee are Miss Juliana Cutting, Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. John H. Iselin, Miss Elizabeth Marbury, Mrs. John Purroy Mitchel, Mrs. Lewis Gouverneur Morris, Mrs. Chauncey Olcott, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mrs. William F. Sheehan and Mrs. L. K. Wilmerding.

MAYFIELD, KLAN, DRY CANDIDATE, LEADS IN TEXAS

Ferguson Behind in the Early Returns.

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 26.—Earle B. Mayfield is leading former Gov. James E. Ferguson by 58,412 votes in the run-off primary for the Democratic nomination for United States senator, returns compiled late tonight showed. These were from 312 counties, including complete returns from thirteen. The count gave Mayfield 164,960, and Ferguson 106,543.

Mr. Ferguson lost his home ward in Temple by 124 votes. The total vote was Mayfield, 297; Ferguson, 173.

Polls did not close until 7 o'clock, and although the vote is light, the final results of the primaries may not be known before Monday, as reports are slow in coming in and the issues are so complicated as to make early predictions almost impossible.

The primaries conclude one of the bitterest campaigns the state has ever known, in which the issues of the Ku Klux Klan and prohibition figured prominently.

The Klan controversy has caused so much friction in the party that Texas Republicans have placed a complete state ticket in the field and will make a strenuous campaign in the November election, based chiefly on opposition to the organization.

Ferguson was anti-Klan during his campaign and has advocated modification of the Volstead act to permit the sale of light wines and beer.

Mayfield is said to be the candidate of the Klan and to have the backing of the Anti-Saloon league.

Should Ferguson be elected it will be a personal vindication for him. He was impeached as governor in 1917, charged with having received personal profits from state funds. Mayfield is state railroad commissioner.

Candidates for congress were nominated by Republican conventions in the following districts: Dr. J. A. Simpson of Marfa, in the Sixteenth; J. E. Smith, Denton, in the Thirteenth; H. O. Ward, Matador, in the Eighteenth; C. A. Lord, Beaumont, in the Second; Heber Page, Dallas, in the Fifth; Congressman Harry M. Wurzbach, San Antonio, in the Fourteenth.

3 BOYS PURLOIN 2 AUTOS TO TOUR UNTO ADVENTURE

Three boys bent on wild west adventure, ended up, almost before they had started forth yesterday, in the Wheaton jail charged with stealing a Ford automobile in Chicago, and another car from R. R. McCormick.

The boys are Frank Marzinowski, 14, 1741 Wabansia avenue; Albert Zilinski, 14, 1756 Wabansia avenue, and Joseph Renk, 16, 1858 North Oakley avenue.

The boys stole the flivver in Chicago and early in the afternoon started for the "wild west." Proceeding as far as Col. McCormick's farm, just west of Wheaton, they ran out of gasoline.

They went into the McCormick grounds, secured two gallons of gasoline, and on the way out abandoned the can of gas and took a car standing hard by instead. They were arrested a little later in Elborn, ten miles west of West Chicago.

Apartments Plentiful Again, First Time in Several Years

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

There were 447,407 flat and house renters in Chicago in 1920 by government count, and some have been added since. Many of these flat dwellers are now looking for apartments. The opportunities for finding them are better by far than at any time in the last five years.

The official records of the city building department indicate that the chances of finding a suitable new flat are twice as good as either last year or in 1917, more than three times as good as in 1919, and twelve times as good as in either 1918 or 1920. It is expected that before Sept. 1 this year, there will be nearly as many permits issued for flats as in the entire preceding four years. That is comparing the last eight months with the previous forty-eight months in Chicago flat construction, so far as the issuance of permits is concerned.

Not Pre-War Stride.

At that, let is not be supposed that Chicago has been going at its pre-war stride in flat building. It is just now striking that pace.

If approximately all of the flats were needed before the war, there is opportunity for a continuance of rapid construction for several years. In the four pre-war years of 1913, '14, '15, and '16 a total of 71,032 flats were constructed in Chicago. That is an average per year of 17,758 apartments.

In the four years previous to 1922, the total new flats numbered 13,587—an annual average of 3,396. That is one-fifth of the pre-war average. But city building officials expect that this year will be above the average of the four selected pre-war years. Nineteen hundred and twenty-two to date is running a trifle above the best flat building year the city has of record. Still they estimate that the cost of building now is 15 per cent higher than four months ago.

These comparisons are all on the basis of number of flats as compiled by the city health and building departments. The number of permits for flat buildings, the frontage involved and the millions of dollars in estimated costs mean little to the man and woman who are out hunting for a flat. Such statistics serve only to confuse and peeve such foot-sore individuals.

More Bungalows by Half.

In addition to the flat buildings, this year promises to see nearly 50 per cent more bungalow, cottage, and residence construction than Chicago has had in the best of its last ten years. In 1913, when the government estimated Chicago's population at 2,354,528, there were 3,745 homes built in Chicago. Contrast that with 3,296 in the first six months of this year, when the government's estimate of the city's population is 2,833,288. Last year was the banner period in Chicago home construction in recent times, when the total was 4,608.

While five more days must elapse before the record for August is available, the city books show that permits were issued for the building of of 11,662 flats in the first seven months of this year. The total for the whole of last year was 6,708, according to the city sanitary bureau. In 1920 the number was 1,093; in 1919 it was 4,758; in 1918 it was 1,030, and in 1917 it was 5,941. That was the year of the big slump in flat building. In 1916 20,525 flats were built.

"Rooms Too Costly."

Present high prices for furnished rooms and light housekeeping suites were yesterday condemned by the rooming house committee of the Tenant's league, which has been conducting an investigation since July 22. The average rent for a furnished room in the rooming house district on the near north side is more than double what it ought to be, according to the report of the committee, of which J. F. Burns Jr. is chairman.

The south side district, the investigation shows, is not so exorbitant in charges as the north side.

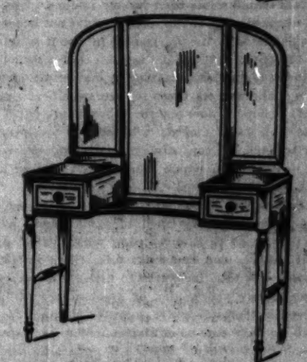
BUYING furniture is really quite a romantic adventure, in one way of looking at it. Because furniture represents a home somewhere; and a home represents two or more people, their joys and cares, their lives; and that means romance.

Living room furniture, maybe; comfort, and decorative pleasure; a place where folks live. Dining room furniture—family and friends around the board. Bedroom furniture—rest and quiet; maybe little children sleeping softly, or a guest to guard. There's certainly romance in buying furniture.

But naturally, if there's romance in buying furniture, there's romance in selling it. It is a matter of deep concern to us to feel that in helping folks buy furniture we're helping to make homes; attractive, comfortable homes.



It adds to our sense of responsibility; we must be sure that the quality you buy is right; that the price you pay is right; we must give some assurance that you haven't made a mistake.

Therefore—Scholle-quality, low prices; and satisfaction guaranteed, or money back.

We have Rugs, too.

Your home will be more attractive with good rugs on the floors. They needn't be very expensive; fine domestic rugs may do well. If you want orientals, they're here, too.

ENCOURAGE THESE YOUNG AMERICANS.

After the war President Wilson identified himself with the policy of universal military training for the United States. His secretary of war, Mr. Baker, recommended it to congress with the indorsement of Mr. Wilson. This was the farthest advance made by the advocates of the system and it was not far enough.

We are sorry to admit it, but the work which made congress uncertain in its opposition to universal training has been largely undone. The time has passed. What the nation would not accept immediately after its experiences in war it is not likely to accept now. It did not see that a democratic system of military training would be an asset to a republic and we must try the next best thing.

The country now has the best defense act it ever had, and what it needs is to make it work as well as possible. It contemplates a civilian reserve and an organization which can be expanded with the least confusion.

Before Mr. Wilson became a realist he spoke of the citizenry accustomed to arms, much as Mr. Bryan spoke of it, something which exists in the imagination and can exist only there unless the nation will take measures to make it a reality. A great many young men of America are willing to prepare themselves for possible military service and to take the advantages which the army is eager to offer them. Many will go into the national guard and many will go into training camps.

Mr. Harding has said that he hopes to see the numbers in the training camps vastly increased. He hopes for 100,000 annually. The situation he finds is that created by congress, which discourages the young men and which takes from the army the officers essential to training.

The volunteer training system for even a restricted period in the summer can do a great deal and if Mr. Harding wants this system to succeed he must address himself to congress with vigor. Scant appropriations held down the number of volunteers. The army does not know how many volunteers it might have been offered. The civilian friends of the training camps aroused enthusiasm in a great many more than could be taken. They were pressing for entrance and congress put up the bars.

We do not believe that congress can stand out against the President on this issue. He can force it to make sufficient appropriations and to give the army the officers needed for the training of civilians. The attitude of congress is small and its purposes are not good.

Pacifism, prejudice, and pork operate to produce the congressional opposition to a patriotic scheme and it causes the government to stand as a discourager of men who want to serve it. We believe that no man takes the training or goes into the national guard without being a better citizen, just as we believe that universal training would produce better citizenship.

It produces responsibility and it teaches discipline. It will tend to raise the physical standard as well as the moral and the spiritual. The men are better for an acknowledgment of their national obligations. That is stimulating. It is a conscious effort for the common good.

The only limit to the number of young men given military training should be imposed by the young men themselves. The government ought to welcome every one who will volunteer. It ought to encourage them. It ought to encourage them with as much cogency as it entices men into the regular army when a recruiting drive is on.

Instead of that Mr. Harding finds congress driving young men away from the camps, limiting the number by restricting the money and by reducing the number of instructors. He can correct that with a few well chosen words, and if his heart is set on 100,000 volunteers he can have them by making provision for them. If he wants half a million we believe he can get them, and it will do a great deal of good to them and to the nation.

THE DEMOCRATIC ALIBI.

An amusing, not to say ridiculous, outburst, is that of Cordell Hull, chairman of the Democratic national committee, concerning the letter of Secretary Hughes on the seating of Senator Newberry. Mr. Hull, in a letter made public by the committee, becomes almost passionate in his denunciation of the efforts of Republican leaders "to single out this one issue and make it paramount as the only means of diverting public attention from many other issues deemed still more damaging."

The fact is, as Mr. Hull and his committee and the rank and file of his party and most of the other voters in the country very well know, that "Newberryism" is primarily an issue raised by the Democrats. It was originated by them, forced by them, and is maintained by them as an extraneous issue, entirely outside ordinary issues of government and administration. It was fostered as such in the hope of breaking down popular faith in the Republican majority in the senate, regardless of the actual accomplishments of this majority.

When Mr. Hull and his committee now seek to place the blame for raising this issue on the Republican party they put themselves in a position to be laughed out of court. They show nothing so much as the weakness of their own position. And if anything more were needed to reveal that weakness they have supplied it in the same arraignment which refers to "the Republican industrial panic of 1921-'22."

In the first place, there has been no industrial panic of 1921-'22. There has been a business depression, but if an honest effort to fix its dates were made they would be 1920-'21 rather than 1921-'22. The depression which the Democratic chairman characterizes as a "Republican industrial panic," began long before the inauguration of the present Republican administration. In so far as it extended into the Harding administration it is as clearly a heritage direct from the Democratic administration of President Wilson as anything possibly could be.

That is true, whether politicians would blame it on the Wilson régime or on the war. The facts are that business has revived and is showing every indication of further revival under the Republican administration, that we have paid off a large fraction of our war debt, that we have greatly reduced routine governmental expenditures, that we have established an economical budget system for the first time in the history of this government, and that the outlook is now excellent, whereas it was exceedingly gloomy when Harding went into the presidential office.

The obvious facts make the entire Hull letter ridiculous.

THE MAN AT THE DESK.

The wreckers have demolished an old building. The excavators complete their work. Steel erectors and builders push a great structure into the air, the product of skillful labor done by men at frequent physical risk and requiring of them endurance, steady nerves, patience, and hard work.

When they are done and gone with their tools the building is occupied by men who may never have done a hard day's physical work in their lives. That will not be true of all of them, but most of them will not have trained hands. They cannot handle tools, except awkwardly. They would be broken, probably, by a half day's work in a field of oats at harvest time.

They may not be physically soft, but if they are in condition it is from games and not from their use of their muscles in productive activities. Some of them, the men at the big desks, may avoid many of life's irksome exercises. They employ many people to protect them from having to do things for themselves.

Men who work with their hands and see the material product of their work think of the men at the desks in the great buildings as non-producers. The farmer in his grain fields and dairy, with his stock and his fruit, and the men in the mills may think of the man at the desk as the beneficiary of their production, a drone in the hive.

But if it were not for the man at the desk the farmer would have nothing except what he raised for himself or made for himself and there would be no industries except the primitive industries of people who all live off the land and are self-sustaining.

A primitive life such as this is possible. Civilizations have emerged out of it and if there were not so many people in the world they might drop back into it. It is the man at the desk who gives the farmer a market for what he sells and the man in the mills an opportunity to convert his labor into a diversity of things needed in his life.

The man at the desk could not continue there unless the farmer raised more than he needed for his own consumption, but take away the man at the desk and the farmer would have nothing but what he got from his soil. The farmer alone would survive that, but he does not want the simplicity and the deprivations of the most primitive agricultural level of life. Soviet Russia went on the rocks when it tried to ignore the fact that the man at the desk is a producer. He produces modern civilization with all its institutions. When Russia destroyed his class it destroyed its civilization. Some labor and agricultural groups think of his class as parasitic. It is the conservator of life as all people now want to live it.

THE CHILDREN'S BOOK SHELF.

Some publicity has been given recently to the American Library association's selection of a "two foot book shelf" for the school children of America. It is merited publicity and worthy of expansion for the benefit of the rising generation. The twenty-five selections are excellent.

The books are "Little Women," "Alice in Wonderland," "Robinson Crusoe," "Tom Sawyer," "Treasure Island," "Boy's Life of Lincoln," "Jungle Book," "Aesop's Fables," "Garden of Verses," "Merry Adventures of Robin Hood," "Tales from Shakespeare," "Boy's King Arthur," "Story of Mankind," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Home Book of Verse for Young Folks," "Last of the Mohicans," "Christmas Carol," "Rip Van Winkle," "Mother Goose," "Hans Brinker," "Boy's Life of Roosevelt," "Wonder Book," "Wild Animals I Have Known," "The Arabian Nights."

There is a list in which any intelligent adult can find delight. It is offered for children especially as a pleasing pathway into delights and advantages of all literature. It is designed to whet the youthful appetite for reading, and it will whet that appetite and bring young people inevitably and naturally to the broader spread of literature which means wholesome entertainment, culture, and education.

What is needed is to interest the youthful mind in books, and this, we believe, perusal of the above list will do. Certainly it can be made to do so if parents will cooperate. And busy mothers who hesitate to take time to read aloud to their children or talk with them of their books will find that such an investment of time to start the children will pay large dividends in time gained while the children pursue their reading.

If the twenty-five books are of any such benefit they will not be enough. The youngsters will soon be looking for more. The supply is unlimited. A boy should move naturally and easily from Cooper's "Last of the Mohicans" to Parkman's histories and get the truth about the American Indians, told in a style equally simple and delightful, and easily within the understanding of any intelligent youngster from 12 years of age on. Incidentally he will learn much of the early history of America from the best authority on the subject. And any girl can progress as naturally from "Little Women" to the simpler of Dickens' novels.

All such reading, Parkman, Dickens, Scott, Dumas, and a host of others, should be covered in youth. Without it, in later years, we shall frequently realize our deficiency, but find ourselves unable to take the time to correct it. We shall wish to keep up with contemporary literature, with time devoted to magazines and more technical reading related to our businesses or professions. Occasionally we may go over the old favorites and master and find delight within them which we overlooked in youth, but we shall lack opportunity which youth does not lack.

If boys and girls are started in this great field of entertainment and culture through some or all of the two foot shelf mentioned, and piloted gently onward into the larger field, they will thank their mentors through life. The individual, the nation, and the world will be the gainer.

THE COMMUTER'S TICKET.

The hollyhock has many seed pods and a single blossom. The wild rose bush is bright with red pips. The elder has drooped in the drought and heat. Yellow leaves are falling from poplars and cottonwoods and there is an edge of red on leaves in the thicket. The robin which hopped the lawn has gone to other feeding and the hairy woodpecker has taken the place of the bluejay in the oaks.

The chickadee and the goldfinch have whisked in and out of the seed bushes and soon the junco will be along from the north. Falling acorns hit the roof. There are dried stalks of corn in the garden which had set forth the early August table. There are new rifts in the foliage and new colors.

Dried vines scrape against the wall. Night drops more quickly and the owl hoots in a rising wind. The September ticket beckons to the gate of autumn as the summer days run along the western rim. The door of a season is closing. A gust of wind will blow it shut as the wild geese come down from the north and as migrants are a-wing in the light of the moon.

MAKE TAXES FAIR.

The Illinois constitutional convention is to reassemble next month for what is expected to be a brief session to put the finishing touches upon its work prior to submitting the document to a popular referendum. We do not believe it would be wise to attempt the rewriting of extensive sections of the proposed new constitution at this date, but one thing stands out as in urgent need of attention. It is only a paragraph, but it deals with what is probably the most vital single issue of government, the raising of income; in other words, taxation.

The framers of the proposed constitution recognized a most important point when they sought to relieve the public and the state of the injustice and hardship of the present inequitable and ineffective system of taxing personal property. They know that personal taxes are dodged, by rich and poor alike, that the income of the state suffers, and that owners of real property are unjustly penalized to make up the shortage. As a way out of that difficulty they propose state income taxes. To that extent they have broken down an ancient precedent and indorsed a principle. It was a bad precedent and it is a good principle.

But the medium of correction is faulty. As it reads at present it provides that "in lieu of any tax on intangible property by valuation the general assembly may provide a uniform and substantial tax on the income derived therefrom." That would seem to leave tangible personal property subject to the ordinary tax by valuation, which is the tax most generally dodged. That is wrong. It is unjust to tax both the income and the source of income. A tax on the former is sufficient to cover the latter, and if provided to do so would effectually reduce the evil of tax dodging.

That section, therefore, we believe should be rewritten to provide for a tax on all income, whether derived from intangible or tangible personal property. Such a change will go far toward stopping tax dodging in this state. It will equalize taxation according to the benefits of government conferred upon the taxpayer, and remove the present injustice done to citizens who make honest tax returns and to those owning real property.

IF THE SHOE FITS.

The North China Daily News, the official British paper in China, is very indignant, according to a dispatch from Shanghai to THE TRIBUNE, because of certain remarks made by Secretary of the Navy Denby in Yokohama.

The secretary decried shipping practices exercised to the disadvantage of American goods and American merchants. In that he made a point, of which there have been many reports in this country of late, to the effect that American shipments in Japanese vessels to Chinese and other far eastern markets were discriminated against. Mr. Denby, traveling in his official capacity, is not a man, we believe, who would make such remarks without some foundation. We therefore accept the remarks as at least tentative verification of such charges of discrimination.

What we do not understand is why the British chambers of commerce in China should show indignation. The remarks were made in a Japanese seaport to an audience, presumably, largely Japanese. Would the Japanese react in that manner if the same remarks had been made by the same man in Liverpool to a British audience? We believe not. They would feel that it was directed to the men and interests addressed. But the British in China take exception. If the shoe fits they may wear it.

Editorial of the Day

THE FARMER AND THE RAILROAD WORKER.

[Commerce and Finance.]

The railroaders insist on a certain "standard of living." David Friday, president of the Michigan Agricultural college, states that the persons engaged in railroad transportation number less than 4½ per cent of our total working population, and in 1921 received 7 per cent of the nation's purchasing power, while the farmers, numbering 26 per cent of our working population, received less than 20 per cent of that same buying power.

What the farmer did with that 20 per cent of the nation's buying power is admirably told in a letter by a farmer's wife to the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph. Last year they sold $772.06 worth of cantaloupes, paying $611.20 to the railroads to get them to market and netting $160.86. They sold $1,029.50 worth of watermelons, paid the railroads $865.90, and netted $163.60. They sold $2,922.77 worth of peaches, the railroads got $2,109.62, the picking and packing cost $671.25, and they netted $141.90. Their total "profits" came apparently to $466.36, but out of this came the cost of fertilizer, spraying material, etc., and the farmer's wife is begging her husband to give up the business—go on strike, as it were—declaring they are working only for the railroads.

She wants to know if the farmer, as well as the railroad man, is not entitled to some kind of "standard of living."

LOW BLOOD PRESSURE.

HIGH blood pressure has received a great deal of publicity. Low blood pressure almost none; high blood pressure has gotten into the insurance man's thinking; low blood pressure has not.

The insurance man's thinking about disease, ill health, and death runs straight as an arrow to dollars and cents. The balance of us mix up a lot of foolishness with our health thinking.

Which means that, so far as we now know, low blood pressure is not of great importance as a cause of death, though it causes some people a lot of worry.

Dr. S. R. Roberts, in making a study of blood pressure in several thousand people, finds that a considerable number have low blood pressure.

These he divided into four classes:

1. Those in comparative health.
2. Those with complaints of weakness and exhaustion.
3. Those with some varieties of heart disease, tuberculosis, anemia, fevers, and infections such as pneumonia and typhoid fever.
4. Low blood pressure during surgical procedures and conditions such as shock, hemorrhage, injuries, and during anesthesia and operations.

In group one, of course nothing need be done. If health is good, manifestly low blood pressure is of no consequence.

In group 4 the low blood pressure may be an advantage. For instance, it lessens the chance of hemorrhage. In some surgical conditions low blood pressure may be significant and may call for treatment directed toward the cause.

In group 3 the low blood pressure is an effect. In certain conditions, such as pneumonia and typhoid, it might be of advantage. In typhoid it lessens the danger of hemorrhage. In pellagra and anemia it is an effect, but it shows that the disease which causes it is severe, and should be treated.

In the second of Roberts' groups were forty-nine cases. They were people whose condition seemed to partake of chronic exhaustion. Among the symptoms are vertigo and mental and physical fatigue. Another physician adds apathy, poor appetite, poor sleep, and tendency to headache after ordinary exertion, and lack of endurance.

In the discussion Dr. Phillips said that if we inquire into the pubertal and adolescent history of these cases we find that in childhood they fainted early, and many of them had albumin in the urine during their years of rapid growth.

These are the people with few enthusiasms, who do not care for competitions, and who do not get excited easily. One reputer said the condition was frequent along the gulf coast, and he thought exposure to great heat was a cause. It is known that in high tension a hot general bath is fine to reduce the blood pressure. Conversely, a daily cold shower should be a good means of treating chronic low pressure cases of this second group.

Children who show a tendency in this direction should be trained in competitive games and should have their capacity for enthusiasm and partisanship cultivated.

I wonder if Mr. Sabre on "If Winter Comes" had low blood pressure?

BREAST MILK NOT ENOUGH.

A Young Mother writes: I have read your answers to "M. M." in regard to breast milk for baby. You say breast milk is not a perfect food for a baby over six months. Would like to know what a person is going to feed one.

I have a girl 6 months old who weighs 16½ pounds; weighed 8 pounds at birth; has had nothing but breast milk every three hours.

What can I give her now?

Is there any pamphlet one can get on how to feed one so young?

I have been told to give her nothing but breast milk till she was 9 months old. The women around here say it will make her sick to give anything else.

REPLY.

A very young baby needs and should have nothing but breast milk and water. But when it gets a little older it needs other food in addition to breast milk, just as a cow nurses and also nibbles tender grass.

A baby 6 months old should have breast milk, water, fruit juice or tomato juice, well cooked cereal, and strained vegetable soup. At 8 months finely mashed vegetable and hard bread or crackers should have been added to the list of foods.

Most state health departments furnish booklets on infant feeding.

If yours does not, send me 9 cents for postpaid copy of "The Right Food for the Growing Child."

COLDS AND CHILLS.

G. E. H. writes:

What is a cold?

What is a chill?

REPLY.

An infection with a certain germ or one of a group. Colds get well spontaneously. It is well to take care of one's self while suffering from a cold.

An evidence of nervous shock. The cause may be malaria, or some other infection, or excitement. Warm applications and mental quiet are of service in cutting short a chill.

STARCH IN FOODS.

Walter writes: I have to restrict the use of starchy foods on account of boils.

Kindly give me a list of the most important ones with percentage of starch.

REPLY.

Butter and other fats, none.

Lettuce, cucumbers, tomatoes, spinach, asparagus, sauerkraut, greens, celery, okra, cabbage, radishes, string beans, grapefruit, olives, and some nuts, 5 per cent or less.

Pumpkin, turnip, squash, beets, carrots, onions, oranges, berries, peaches, pineapples, and nuts, between 5 and 10 per cent.

Peas, parsnips, apples, pears, cherries, raspberries, almonds, and walnuts, between 10 and 15 per cent.

Potatoes, peas, corn, boiled rice, bananas, and peanuts, 20 per cent.

Breads and cereals, 40 to 80 per cent.

SYMPTOMS OF DIABETES.

W. writes: What are the symptoms of diabetes?

How can one tell if a person has this illness?

REPLY.

Presence of sugar in the urine, as shown by chemical tests, thirst, frequent urination, obesity, and boils are among the symptoms.

SUNFLOWERS AND HAY FEVER.

Inquisitive writes: Last evening I heard some neighbors discussing hay fever and its causes, and the more loquacious one told the other that sunflowers were the cause. Therefore, my near neighbor went to work this morning and cut down every one in sight. Here in the dessert, the sunflower is our only piece of foliage, and I certainly love anything green resembling flowers at all.

Will you tell me what you think of it?

As I never had hay fever, that part was never worrying me.

REPLY.

Sunflower pollen occasionally causes hay fever. It is one of the less important causes.

FOOD FOR THE BABY.

Mrs. F. D. B. writes: Is it proper to give grape juice to a baby 7 months old?

Should a child of 2½ years have Irish potatoes?

How should they be cooked?

REPLY.

Yes.

Yes.

Baked, mashed, boiled, or any way preferred.

BABY SHOULD REST.

A. A. G. writes: My daughter has a child 2 years old, and she is very fond of making visits, and having no one to take care of the child they take the little one with them.

Do you think it harmful to keep the child up until 11 o'clock several nights during the week?

REPLY.

Yes.

MAY BE PILLAGRA.

Mrs. N. H. writes: What is a scalded tongue the symptom of?

REPLY.

It may mean pellagra.

It may mean pernicious anemia—called by Hunter glossitic anemia.

A FRIENDLY LOAN.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—[To the Friend of the People.]—I sent a friend (supposedly) of mine, who is in the United States army, $250 to buy his way out. He promised to pay it back as soon as he was discharged, but he discontinued writing to me and I now hear that he does not wish to leave the army. I am in need of the money. I have receipts to show he received the money. He is not yet 21 years of age. Can I recover?

J. S. S.

The chances of legal recovery seem slim.

WINE FOR HOME USE.

Chicago, Aug. 21.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I would like to know if a person is permitted to make some light wine for family use and how large a quantity may be made. A friend claims that each family may make 200 gallons for its own use by taking out a license for same.

N. M. F.

They are mistaken on the 200 gallon matter. Sec. 29 of the national prohibition law provides that the penalties of the law "shall not apply to a person for manufacturing nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices exclusively for use in his home." The federal prohibition commission has ruled that providing such liquors are used exclusively in the home, "the phrase 'nonintoxicating' means nonintoxicating in fact, and not necessarily less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol." You will observe that beers and liquors other than fruit juices remain subject to the one-half of 1 per cent rule.

VICIOUS—WITH OR WITHOUT LICENSE.

Chicago, Aug. 18.—[To the Friend of the People.]—My neighbor has an overgrown pup and it sprang at my 7 year old boy, leaving seven deep scratches and black and blue marks, besides giving him a severe fright. Should he not be kept in the yard and wear a muzzle? Is it not required to wear a license?

MRS. P. J. N.

AUTO COMMISSIONS.

Chicago, Aug. 21.—[To the Legal Friend the People.]—About two months ago I was employed as salesman for an auto agency. The business was sold and I did not remain with the concern. I had two orders for the sale of cars on file, and one of the former owners had signed my name to several other orders. All the cars have been delivered. The new owners do not wish to allow me commission, although they made an agreement with former owners to pay the salesmen their commissions. Am I entitled to the commissions?

W. C. A.

You appear to be entitled to commissions on sales that you made. We cannot advise as to the effect of the former owners signing your name without knowing what was intended at the time.

WIFE'S SUPPORT.

Chicago, Aug. 26.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—My wife was seriously ill and was taken to the hospital. When she left the hospital she went to the home of a relative. Recently she requested me to send to her personal property and part of the household goods, as she did not intend to return to our home. I did so and she writes that she will expect monthly payments from me. Am I compelled to contribute to her support after she left me?

J. W. L.

You are not obliged to contribute to her support as long as you keep open an offer to furnish her a home which she refuses to accept. TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

FOREST FIRE LOSSES.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—Your editorial of Aug. 21 "The Great American Ash Heap" was conceived in the spirit of conservation and all credit is due you for the interest of your writer.

Many millions of capital have been supplied by investors to aid in the development of the remote forest areas, and all this money has been loaned on the security of first mortgages on timber and the facilities for logging and manufacture.

Exaggerated estimates of forest fire losses may promote caution on the part of campers and tourists; but they do harm to the lumber industry by unduly alarming cautious investors and making it difficult for lumber operators to obtain new capital at reasonable interest rates for the conduct of their enterprises.

You may be sure that the fire losses this year have not totaled any considerable part of the "$45,000,000 annual forest fire loss" mentioned in your editorial. At the prevailing loaning rates on the best stumpage in Washington a loss of $45,000,000 would mean that 25,000,000,000 feet of timber had been destroyed. We are now compiling accurate data from authoritative sources regarding fire losses for this year and for many years past. We feel confident this research will show that the fire losses this season (which has been one of the driest for twenty-five years) are not one-fiftieth of 25,000,000,000 feet. We have personal knowledge of one large timber tract in the region of the prevailing fires where on the average less than one acre out of every 4,200 has been burned over during the last fifteen years. Forest fires usually occur on logged over areas or in very inaccessible and mountainous regions where timber generally has very small commercial value. Moreover, many times none of the merchantable timber on the areas burned over is even killed. Generally the burned area is logged in time to permit a salvage of at least 75 per cent of the original value of the timber.

During the last few years the state and federal governments and timber owners have been coöperating in such an effective manner that there has been no really disastrous fire in commercial timber in any one locality.

BAKER, FENTRESS & CO.

ANTI-GERMAN.

South Bend, Ind., Aug. 11.—Why an intelligent, powerful, and thought building newspaper like THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE should blindly become the agent of German propaganda, subtle if you will, but usually obvious to a school boy, is beyond the conception of many intelligent American readers of a formerly American press. The matter in point is McCutcheon's cartoon of Aug. 11, the climax of a tendency shown in press dispatches too numerous to mention.

We sit on the judgment bench here in the middle west, 4,000 miles from the Rhine, and moan for poor Germany struggling to recover from a domineering France. Cruel France, she little knows of Germany's terrible condition clear across the Rhine—almost ten minutes by motor.

Little knows! We of western civilization can thank an Almighty Providence that she has one man who knows—Marshal Foch! He who knows through the history of centuries of depradations from the Hun that there is one and only one thing that proud pretender understands—the 75's along the Rhine. France well knows that the Hun bombed, murdered, and gassed for four long years and, losing, must now resort to the means in which he is better trained—the pen, the sob, the cry of "comrade," truly as great an art as war. In four centuries France has finally developed a hard heart and saved a few homes.

But possibly she will learn and be advised by the middle west in assisting the dragon to its feet, that her sons of another generation may knock him down, perhaps—if he is not too strong.

ABOLISH THE RAILROAD LABOR BOARD.

Chicago, Aug. 12.—The railroad labor board did not blunder when it set a wage of 70 cents an hour for skilled mechanics. The blunder was made by congress in creating a railroad labor board. If the railroad labor board is a good thing for railroad workers, a farmer labor board is a good thing for farmers. The majority of farmers are skilled mechanics. If they were guaranteed 70 cents an hour and extras for working overtime by a farm labor board, butter would cost $1 per pound; eggs, $1 per dozen; wheat, $3 per bushel, and hogs, $1.50 per pound. How long would the people stand for a farm labor board? Its functions are economically unsound, and, therefore, it should be abolished.

The same applies to any board which congress may create to establish minimum wages and the price of coal. Are the American people so incapable of taking care of themselves that some of them, like the railroad workers and miners, must be nursed like babies?

RICHARD HAVEN.

THE WIZARD TELEGRAPHER.

Chicago, Aug. 17.—The papers of late have been quite overflowed over the ridiculous demise of Terence O'Rourke Kesler, "world's champion telegrapher," "lightning key expert," etc. Strange to relate, this "wizard" is an unknown quantity in tournament circles, no one in Chicago, New York, or Boston, or anywhere else having ever heard of him. Evidently the young man "put one over" on the reporter, at least as regards his wizardry.

The phenomenal record made by Kesler at the "Pageant tournament" (a tournament that no one ever heard of) of 319 words in 2 mins. and 53 secs. is absurd. The record is 68 words per minute. Surely they do great things at the Pageant. DAVID J. ELLINGTON.

Winner Carnegie cup championship around telegrapher. Winner Clarence Mackay cup. Winner Boston News Bureau cup, and others.

SPEAKING OF EXPLOSIONS.

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 19.—The absolutely uncalled for, unauthoritative, and un-American explosion of Ralph Blumgreen in today's issue deserves no further recognition than to be classed, in that writer's own terms, as mere tommy twaddle. It does not now, never has nor ever will reflect the opinion of the hundreds of thousands of real Americans in Wisconsin who can only wonder why people of such stripe do not hurry back to the Rhine they appear to love so well instead of waving a red flag, blackguarding the administration and ridiculing the powers for all that is best in a vain attempt to bring the wonderful economic condition of their beloved "vaterland" over here.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

SONG OF THE WESTERN MEN.

By Robert Stephen Hawker.

A good sword and a trusty hand!
And merry heart and true!
King James' men shall understand
What Cornish lads can do.

And have they fixed the where and when?
And shall Trelawney die?
Here's twenty thousand Cornish men
Will know the reason why!

Out spake their captain brave and bold,
A merry wight was he:
"If London Tower were Michael's hold,
We'll set Trelawney free!

"We'll cross the Tamar, land to land,
The Severn is no stay;
With 'one and all' and hand in hand,
And who shall bid us nay?

"And when we come to London Wall,
A pleasant sight to view,
Come forth! Come forth, ye cowards all,
Here's men as good as you!

"Trelawney he's in keep and hold,
Trelawney he may die;
But here's twenty thousand Cornish bold
Will know the reason why!"

GOAL 100 YEARS, DR. SMITH DIES 177 DAYS SHORT

Noted Surgeon Almost Realized His Wish.

Elmira, N. Y., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Dr. Stephen Smith, 99, founder of the American Public Health association, died this morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Walter C. Mason, at Missour Falls. Dr. Smith declared last year that all people should live to 100 years of ago and announced that he would do so by continuing to eat proper food, including wine. He missed the century mark by a little more than six months.

Dr. Smith was born in Onondaga county, Feb. 19, 1823. He attended Geneva Medical college and later became an interne at the Sisters of Charity hospital at Buffalo. In 1851 he was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at New York. From that time until 1891 he was identified with Bellevue hospital.

He drafted numerous federal and state health regulations and during the civil war compiled a work on surgery that was a great aid to army surgeons.

Two Books His Biography.

Recently he completed two books, one "Who Is Insane?" depicting his experience as a lunacy commissioner; the other "The City That Was," relating to long connection with hospital and health affairs in New York. These works constitute his biography.

Dr. Smith's program for longevity includes work all the way. The easy chair was a step toward the grave in his philosophy; so he worked to the end—up to his final illness he spent a certain number of hours a day at his typewriter telling the story of his career.

Decalogue of Longevity.

He gave these ten commandments of long life:

"Eat hardly any meat.

"Drink lots of milk, and if it disagrees with you drink more.

"Take a ten or fifteen minute nap after luncheon and dinner.

"Sleep ten hours.

"Take a nap outdoors when the weather permits.

"Don't smoke.

"Don't eat sweets.

"Take no stimulants, such as tea or coffee.

"Avoid the easy chair; absence of work is the first step toward the grave.

"And, finally, just be natural; quit all foolishness.'"

SWEDEN VOTES TODAY ON BAN AGAINST RUM

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 26.—Whatever the result of the prohibition referendum tomorrow, it is plain after reading the posters and pamphlets circulated by both the wets and drys that Sweden is in for a bad time. The proposed prohibition amendment would retain liquors of 2.8 per cent alcohol.

While pictorially the prohibition battle is rather a one-sided affair in favor of the wets, the drys have the advantage of organization. The Good Templar league, which has been in existence for twenty years, alone has a membership of 300,000, or one-tenth of the voters in the country.

The wets have only been organized for six months, and they admit that the battle will be close.

Dr. Stephen Smith

Feb. 19, 1823. Aug. 26, 1922.

HOPKINS BURIED WITH HUNDREDS AT THE SERVICES

Aurora, Ill., Aug. 26.—So many hundreds attended the funeral today of the late Albert J. Hopkins, former United States senator, the street in front of the home had to be closed to street car and automobile traffic. Floral offerings came from all over the United States, and messages of condolence were received by the widow from Gov. Small and hundreds of high officials.

The Rev. E. W. Lousbury, a friend of the former senator for over fifty years, preached the funeral sermon.

"Albert Hopkins achieved greatness," he said, "not by any meteoric-like brilliancy, but by unflagging toil. He was never idle.

"His labors in the senate for the Panama canal were so noteworthy they earned from Mr. Hopkins' former colleague in the house, Joseph Cannon, the expression 'the most able man in the senate.'"

All of the law offices in Aurora were closed during the funeral, and the Chicago bar sent a deputation to the services. Pallbearers were old friends from Mr. Hopkins' home town. Interment was in Spring Lake cemetery.

DELAVAN SMITH'S FUNERAL WILL BE HELD TOMORROW

Funeral services for Delavan Smith, publisher of the Indianapolis News, who died Friday night at his home in Lake Forest, will be held Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock, at the home. The services will be public but burial at Lake Forest will be private. Death was attributed to heart disease superinduced by leukemia, a disease of the blood.

Mr. Smith left a will but no estimate of his estate, generally reputed to have been large, was obtainable. Besides his newspaper property Mr. Smith had other extensive business interests. His only living relatives are cousins. Mr. Smith, who was a bachelor, 61 years old, was a cousin of the late Charles Warren Fairbanks, who was Vice President of the United States.

The Indianapolis News, it was learned, will be conducted as formerly without change of policy, as arranged by Mr. Smith some time ago.

$100,000 LUMBER FIRE.

Hattiesburg, Miss., Aug. 26.—Fire of undetermined origin destroyed the Williard Yellow Pine company's planing mill and more than a million feet of lumber at Poplarville, Miss., last night, causing a loss estimated at $100,000.

BAKU OIL FIELDS FAIL; REDS BAR PRIVATE OWNING

BY JOHN CLAYTON.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 26.—Foreign capital is wanted in the Baku oil regions, but that capital must work on concessions and not try to purchase properties, according to Arthur Whitehall, who has just returned from Batoum.

The wealthy Baku fields are rapidly falling into decay through lack of tools and equipment. The men in charge realize that something must be done immediately or production will cease within five months. The Asnef group—the old Baku area excluding Grazny—is pumping slightly over 200,000 tons daily, with production constantly decreasing.

Following the failure of the Russians to get what they wanted from Genoa and the realization that they can't expect anything from Europe, they have completely nationalised all the fields and are now searching for a foreign organization with sufficient capital to take over the entire show on a concession basis.

"Our firm was closed and the manager arrested because the bolsheviks suspected us of buying oil rights," said Mr. Whitehall. "Mr. Moet and Mr. Dodge were held on the same charge. Despite the fact that they are in desperate need the bolsheviks are unwilling to recognize private property and are angry with the Shell and other companies which thought to establish rights through purchase."

GOUGE YANKEES HELD IN HAVRE BY PORT STRIKE

HAVRE, France, Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—Several hundred Americans are crowded in the hotels here awaiting the sailing of the French liner Savoie, the departure of which is uncertain due to the tieup of the port through the general strike which has gripped practically all the industries here for many days.

Hotel prices are constantly rising and, with the complete cessation of trolley cars, taxi drivers are charging the Americans exorbitant rates for transportation.

Eighteen thousand men have struck in sympathy with the 10,000 metal workers, who have refused to return to work for the last two months, unwilling to accept a 10 per cent reduction in wages.

Some of the younger soldiers objected to obeying orders when commanded to charge the workmen and several were reported to have been arrested. The disorders so far have not necessitated the use of firearms, but in the clashes of last night one-third of the troops and police showed some injuries.

Spanish Workers Aroused as Radical Leader Is Shot

BARCELONA, Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—Angel Pestana, director of the Socialist organ Solidaridad Obrera and noted syndicalist leader, after being shot by unidentified assassins last night and wounded in six places, is dying today in a hospital at Manresa, thirty miles from here. Pestana went to Manresa to hold a conference with workmen, among whom the incident has caused grave unrest.

62,400 pounds of best quality butter were bought and used by us last year

That's a tremendous lot of butter—almost 200 pounds a day. Buying such big quantities day after day gives us the advantage of wholesale prices which are considerably less than the householder must pay. Yet our figures show that last year we paid an average price of close to 50 cents a pound for butter, which gives you a good idea of the high-quality butter we use.

Often hotel and restaurant men say we are extravagant in the use of butter and they marvel at the tremendous quantity we use daily. Do you realize that every egg we cook is cooked in fresh creamery butter? And that we buy only one grade of butter—the best? Even in our kitchens we use only the best butter—no "cooking butter" ever comes into this restaurant.

Our first thought is always of quality. We even go to what others call "extremes" to better the quality and taste of our food. And yet, because you serve yourself and pay only for the food you eat our prices are always from 40 to 60 per cent less than other good dining places must charge to include "service."

WARSHIP, PRIDE OF FRENCH NAVY, SINKS; 3 KILLED

France Strikes Ledge and Turns Over.

LORIENT, France, Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—The battleship France, 23,100 tons, one of the prides of the French navy, struck a rock off Quiberon bay in the darkness of early morning today and went to the bottom in seventy-five feet of water.

All but three of the 900 officers and men and crew were rescued from rafts and lifeboats launched from the battleship before it took its final plunge.

The wrecked warship, which was one of four French battleships of the first line, was returning from night maneuvers to its anchorage at Port Halliguen, when at 1 o'clock this morning it ran on a hidden rock lying twenty-five feet below the surface. A great gash was torn in the steel hull of the dreadnought. It remained afloat an hour, giving the crew enough time for hurried escape in boats. Then the doomed craft slowly settled, turned on its side, and went down. It lies on the bottom and is considered a total wreck.

Blame Swift Currents.

The wreck occurred in the tortuous waters of Quiberon bay about twenty miles southeast of here on the Brittany coast. The swift currents abounding there are supposed to have swept the warship slightly from its course. The deflection was sufficient, however, to carry it squarely and head-on over the pointed rock known and charted, but dangerously concealed beneath the water in this part of the bay. The momentum drove the huge ship forward on to the rock.

It was hoped at first to dislodge it with the help of a side current which was traveling twelve knots. But this proved to be impossible, as the warship was pinned solidly on the rock, which projected into its hold.

The water rushed into the hold, flooding the boilers and short circuiting the electricity. The vessel was in complete darkness, but the night was bright and clear and the surface of the sea was smooth.

Crew Launches Boats.

The engine crew quickly took every precaution to avoid explosions. They closed all compartments and tried every emergency measure to keep the ship afloat as long as possible. The officers were unable to do much maneuvering, with all power gone, but they managed during the hour before the ship sank to steer drift ingly toward shallow water, hoping to reach it.

Meanwhile the crew began launching boats while waiting help from a sister dreadnought, the Paris, and many torpedo boats and other small craft, which had been asked by wireless for help.

Most of the members of the crew were kept at their posts until the France began settling on the shallow, rocky bottom alongside the channel port known as Basse Nouvelle. When it was seen that there was no hope of the vessel's remaining upright, wireless messages were sent out that the crew was about to abandon the ship, and small boats and life rafts, which had been made ready, were quickly launched.

Only Three Lose Lives.

The crew got off safely before the dreadnaught slumped over on its side, and the 900 officers and men, afloat in boats and rafts, were taken aboard by other vessels. The rescue required several hours.

The France's batteries consisted of twelve twelve inch guns, twenty-two 5.5 inch guns, four three pounders, and four torpedo tubes. It was 544½ feet long and had a speed of 22.6 knots. The warship cost $12,424,000.

MR. AND MRS. A. T. HEMINGWAY.

Mr. and Mrs. Anson T. Hemingway, Oak Park pioneers, will celebrate their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary today at their home, 400 North Oak Park avenue, surrounded by their children and grandchildren. The month of August has proven a lucky one in the lives of the couple, both being born during August, their birthdays falling on Aug. 26, a day preceding the date of their marriage, and it was in August of 1862 that Mr. Hemingway marched away to battle in the civil war, and in August when President Lincoln appointed him a first lieutenant when he was 20 years old.

Mr. and Mrs. Hemingway are both 78 years old. They have lived in Oak Park on the same site at 400 North Oak Park avenue for fifty-three years and have watched the village grow from a hamlet. The couple have six children, Mrs. Frank Hines of Carbondale, Ill., Dr. C. E. Hemingway of Oak Park, Dr. W. A. Hemingway of Taiku, China, George R. Hemingway of Oak Park, Alfred T. Hemingway (deceased), and Grace Hemingway of Oak Park. They have twenty grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. Hemingway are prominent in civic, social and church circles in Oak Park. Mr. Hemingway is a member of the Borrowed Time club.

CULTIVATED JAP PEARLS FAIL TO FIND FAVOR HERE

Reports from Paris that cultivated Japanese pearls cannot be distinguished from oriental pearls or that they are equal in quality are discounted by Chicago jewelers. Nate N. Lebolt of Lebolt & Co. states that his firm has been interested in Japanese pearls since the Paris exposition and that it imported some for trial here. However, these pearls proved so unsatisfactory that it was necessary to throw them away.

Coating Easily Broken.

Mr. Lebolt says that since that time there has been some progress in cultivation of pearls, but any one familiar with the two kinds can easily tell the oriental jewel. He explains that Japanese pearls are just a thin coating of pearl over an inside plug.

This thin coating, he adds, is easily broken and the jewel gives no wear whatever. He explains that when the Japanese pearl is drilled so that it can be worn in a necklace it soils easily at the drill hole and looks badly.

Furthermore, Mr. Lebolt says Japanese pearls do not compare in color, luster, or brilliancy with the oriental.

Boosts Held Propaganda.

Mr. Lebolt asserts that last year European newspapers and magazines published so many articles on the subject that the leading jewelers decided to make a thorough investigation. They found, he said, that propaganda on the part of Japanese pearl cultivators was back of the stories, which were also fostered by a diamond syndicate which had become alarmed at the enormous sale of pearls. He added that this year many similar articles appeared.

NEW WAY TO HEAT YOUR HOME

The facts and figures to your right foreshadow what the coal strike is going to cost you this winter! Read them—and you will be even more glad to know about this wonderful new invention that not only frees you from all coal-price worry BUT ALSO does away with all the muss, labor and drudgery of dirty coal and wood!

How Much of This Bill Will YOU Have to Pay?

Great Lakes coal shipments 60% behind last year.
Operators lose $25,000,000 through strike.
How will this be made up?
Normal soft coal production—579 million tons. Produced last 8 months—293 million tons. If mines started at capacity today shortage at end of year would be 184 million tons.
Geological Survey says stocks below danger mark even on July 15, 1922.
Shortage of anthracite coal, sixteen million tons.
These Facts Will Cost YOU—How Much?

Does Away With Coal and Wood
No Need to Worry Over Coal Problems

For Furnaces

The Oliver Furnace Burner sells at one-fifth the price of others on the market! Puts a roaring fire in hot water, steam or hot air plants. You turn it up or down, on or off by simply turning valve.

For Heaters

No coal—no wood. No dirt—no ashes. The wonderful Oliver keeps rooms healthfully warm and cozy in coldest Winter weather.

For Cook Stoves

Oliver gives much or little heat—steadily and even, for baking, broiling, frying or boiling—all at the turn of a valve. Better. Cheaper, quicker.

An amazing new kind of heat ends the drudgery of a mussy furnace, heater or cook stove! Ends—for all time—your worry about coal strikes, shortages, and sky-high prices! This wonderful invention, in one minute, turns any furnace, cooking or heating stove into a modern oil-gas stove. Then just the turn of a valve and you instantly get as much or as little heat as you want!

No more fires to build, bank or watch. No more dirty, heavy coal to lift. No more ashes to sift and breathe. You have read how oil is doing away with coal in ships and buildings—and now, through the Oliver, it has been made a perfect fuel for your home! Free yourself from all this—through the Oliver Oil-Gas Burner.

Cheaper Than Coal or Wood

Burns 99% Air and only 5% Coal Oil (ordinary kerosene, the cheapest fuel there is)—turning them into an actual gas that burns with an intensely hot, clean flame. No wicks, no smoke, no danger, no odors, no waiting. Gives three times the heat of coal or wood. Physicians say its even, odorless and dustless heat helps protect you against chills, colds, pneumonia, influenza and other common illnesses.

Fits All Stoves—Any Kind or Size

The Oliver is made in sixteen different models to fit any kind of furnace, cooking or heating stove. No holes to drill, no bolts to fasten, no change whatever in your stove. Simply slips in firebox. Easily slipped in—in one minute. Absolutely safe. Lasts a lifetime.

100,000 Already Sold

No wonder 100,000 Oliver Oil-Gas Burners have already been sold! No wonder each day's mail brings letters like these: Mrs. W. N. Spencer of Connecticut, writes, "The Oliver in my heating stove works like magic. It is wonderful to have quick heat and no work." Francis J. Gardner of Chicago, says, "Would not be without it. My wife likes it fine." Mr. Geo. Flynn of Michigan, writes, "It is cleaner, cheaper, hotter and steadier than coal or wood."

COLLINS' DEATH SPURS ARMY TO WIPE OUT REBELS

3,000 Dublin Men Enlist; Take 106 Prisoners.

BY PAUL WILLIAMS.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

DUBLIN, Aug. 26.—The killing of Michael Collins has strongly reacted upon the troops and a total of 106 prisoners and a considerable quantity of arms were reported captured in a dozen districts today.

Nearly 3,000 Dublin men, most of whom served in the world war, have enlisted in the army since Mr. Collins fell and it is not expected that those who were responsible for his death will be long permitted at large.

It would not be at all surprising if the government should undertake with a large force thoroughly to comb the hilly country east of Cork and Kerry, continuing vigorously until all the leaders of the irregulars are killed or captured. Tom Hales, operating near Macroom, is a marked man, despite a Cork report that he was willing to lay down his arms and join the rebels. Hales' brother, John, is a commandant in the national army.

SEEK STRONG GOVERNMENT

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Aug. 26.—I learn from Dublin that a movement has been started to organize all business men in favor of unflinching support of the Free State in the restoration of order and suppression of the rebellion.

This organization was first formed before the recent elections when Michael Collins made a pact with Eamon de Valera to allow the Republicans seats in the new dail. Arthur Griffith was much opposed to this policy, believing the time for temporizing had ceased, but out of loyalty to his colleagues he consented.

The leading business men of Dublin, however, got together and financed independent candidates pledged to the treaty, most of whom were elected over coalition candidates whose loyalty to the treaty was doubtful. This organization is now being assembled again and will meet in Dublin about Sept. 1 in order to take steps to uphold a strong government in Ireland.

Puts Blame on Britisher.

It is believed that Mr. Collins, who will be buried Monday, left behind him a document denouncing Erskine Childers, the renegade British officer, who has been Mr. de Valera's chief adviser, as the prime cause of the trouble in Ireland, and declaring his own opinion was that Mr. de Valera was led by Childers.

Mr. Childers, who was in the British intelligence service during the war, appeared in Ireland after its close and identified himself with the most extreme faction and has been the brains of Mr. de Valera's organization both in a political and military way. He has an American wife who is as extreme as himself and whose house has been a rendezvous in Dublin for all anti-British, and later, anti-Free State elements of note.

LEGION NOTES

Members of Advertising Men's post have opportunity to join with the Women's Advertising club in its big dance at the Midway gardens, Monday evening. It involves no expense for the post but offers a wonderful chance to get together for a big time in a fine place.

At a meeting of Lawndale-Crawford post No. 98, American Legion, the following delegates were elected to the Rock Island convention: Commander George A. Novak, Past Commander Edward P. Skubic, Joseph Baumruk Jr., and Frank C. Slays. Commander Novak was endorsed for executive committeeman, fourth district, and Edward P. Skubic for national delegate to New Orleans. The post will have a Labor day encampment at Loon Lake, Ill., with a water carnival and Venetian night Sunday a feature.

AMERICA HOLDS FATE OF EUROPE, EX-GOV. COX SAYS

LONDON, Aug. 26.—James M. Cox, former Democratic candidate for president, was the guest of Prime Minister Lloyd George at breakfast today. Last night Mr. Cox dined with Col. E. M. House, who is visiting here.

Before going to the premier's residence in Downing street this morning, Mr. Cox gave out a statement to the American and British press dealing with the economic plight of Europe and quoting the German chancellor, Dr. Wirth, as saying to him a few days ago in Berlin:

"Unless the United States interests herself in European affairs within a very short time, all in Germany is lost, and all in central Europe as well."

Mr. Cox's statement concludes with the assertion that the fate of the world is in the hands of America, and urges quick action by the United States to bring about the rehabilitation of Europe.

"The storm center of the economic world is central Europe," Mr. Cox said. "Those who have visited Austria and Germany are of one opinion as to the state of things now and the tragic point to which both countries are drifting. Austria has reached a stage of almost complete dissolution. The approach of Germany to the same condition is steadily marked by every passing hour.

"The nations of Europe are deadlocked on the reparations question. There seems to be no relief on this side of the Atlantic. The master key is held by the United States. No decision by England seems likely to be accepted by the French. The French government will not sanction a proposal from Germany which might approximate a readjustment of the figures now in the minds of French statesmen, because that circumstannce might be regarded by the public opinion of France as a surrender to Germany.

"The government of Germany desires peace. The leaders are progressively democratic and the story of hidden arms, with the exception of unimportant sporadic community instances, is pure fiction. Germany has 20,000,000 more people than she can sustain except under high industrial stress. When the mark was 100 to 200 to the dollar there were certain trade advantages accruing to Germany but in the present circumstances the banks of Germany cannot finance the industries of that country in the purchase of raw products and foodstuffs.

"Unless relief is granted shops will soon be closed, millions will be out of employment and the winter will bring the threat if not the certainty of starvation.

"With economic collapse the government will go down too. If Germany falls, France is without reimbursement, and cannot sustain the loss involved without serious consequences.

Mr. Cox advocated the designation of Herbert Hoover as an American representative on the reparations commission.

"Mr. Hoover holds the confidence of Europe," continued Mr. Cox's statement. "Peoples and governments trust him. He can analyze the economic situation in Germany. His decision as to what Germany can pay beyond much question of doubt would be accepted by France—and that means by all parties. I believe every chancellor in Europe would welcome his coming. The mere announcement of his selection would stabilize things.

"With reparations adjusted, Germany and France—both are in need of large loans—would be given credit, and Austria, too. Then would come the dawn of a new day."

Gen. Allen's Guard Still Alive; Expected to Die

COBLENZ, Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—Private Lester Irons of Toms River, N. J., who was found yesterday in a pool of blood badly wounded in the head, was still alive today, but there was slight hope of his recovery. First reports last night said he had been killed. A board of officers of the American army of occupation is investigating the tragedy, which occurred just outside the garage of Maj. Gen. Henry T. Allen, where Private Irons had been on guard duty.

Study the Map ....it will impress on your mind....quicker than words the advantages of locating in Berwyn Terrace. With State and Madison Streets as the pivotal point you will note that Berwyn Terrace is as close to the heart of things as Oak Park, 75th and Halsted, Rogers Park, not much farther out than Wilson Avenue, 63rd and Halsted, or Jackson, Washington or Garfield Parks. Those who bought property in these districts a few years ago have made fortunes—a similar opportunity is offered you today in Berwyn Terrace. It is much closer than Evanston, Park Ridge, La Grange and Hinsdale, and the big outstanding fact is THAT YOU CAN AFFORD TO BUY IN BERWYN TERRACE....where prices in the other locations mentioned are practically prohibitive!

$10 a Month Pays for a large, attractive home-site in beautiful Berwyn Terrace. Berwyn Terrace is an ideal home location now! It adjoins a solidly built-up district of beautiful homes.... is within a few blocks from the 320 acre Forest Preserve and only a short distance from the site of the world's largest zoological gardens. Come Out Sunday Drive out or let us take you there! If you feel like driving out yourself .....take this route, Ogden Ave. to 22nd Street, west on 22nd Street to Oak Park Ave.; south on Oak Park Ave. to Ogden Ave.; to our local office on the property, corner of Oak Park Ave. and Ogden Ave., or come to our downtown office, or Phone Dearborn 4147, 4148, 4149, 4150....we will call for you. Anticipating a great demand on the part of people who want to be sure to see this property we will keep our downtown office open Saturday night until 9 P. M. and all day Sunday. Give us a ring....or come in and we will take you to Berwyn Terrace and take you back home without obligating you in the least.

Consider These Points: Berwyn Terrace is but 9 miles from the heart of the loop. Three great thoroughfares bound its limits. On the North is Ogden Avenue, which is now being opened up all the way to Lincoln Park. On the South is Pershing Road, destined to be a 110-ft. boulevard all the way to the lake. On the west is Oak Park boulevard, a beautiful paved road running north through the heart of Oak Park. Schools, churches and a prosperous business community play an important part in the popularity of Berwyn Terrace. Take these words to heart. Act Now! Berwyn Terrace offers the greatest home-site buying opportunity presented in the past decade! Be sure to come out SUNDAY.

SCHOOL REALTY DEALS SIFTED BY GRAND JURY

Pay $95,000 for $65,000 Property, Is Charge.

Charle A. White, vice president of the Lincoln State bank, and T. J. Hickey, head of the Utica Supply company, will be the two most important witnesses to be heard tomorrow by the grand jury investigating the school board graft scandal. White will be heard on the real estate deal in connection with which William A. Bither, former board attorney, and Henry W. Kuhn, realtor, were indicted last May.

It is charged that through Bither's influence the school board paid White $95,000 for the Wendell Phillips school site, which had been offered to them for $65,000 a week previously by Charles E. Springer, real estate dealer. Hickey is expected to be questioned in regard to the sale of supplies to the board by his company, the name of which appears often on the board's records.

Assistant State's Attorney Gorman and Special Prosecutor Justin F. McCarthy spent yesterday in reviewing evidence. They announced that the accounts of Charles E. Ward had as yet shown nothing incriminating. Ward, admitted politically with the city hall, is attorney for the Fitzgerald Boiler works, whose head, Thomas Fitzgerald, was named in the fraud true bill with former President of the Board Davis, former Vice President Severinghaus, and Business Manager Forsberg.

BOY REPORTED MISSING.

Police have been asked to search for Louis E. Kammerdall, 16 years old, 4337 West Jackson boulevard, who disappeared Friday. He is 5 feet 8 inches tall, wore old clothes, and was without money, according to his parents.

OUR FIRST CABLE NEWS

FOLLOWING are photographs of an editorial and news item appearing in The Tribune of Aug. 27, 1858—sixty-four years ago today. The writer of these lines would be surprised to know The Tribune in certain of its editions these days prints cable dispatches of events occurring in "the following day" (because of difference in time), such as the recent battle of the Four Courts in Dublin or the war in China. Also he didn't realize that The Tribune would be receiving sixty-four years later several thousand words of cable news each day, garnered by its thirty-seven correspondents, and much of it coming by special Tribune wireless.

First News Dispatch by the Atlantic Telegraph.

We present this morning the first news dispatch over the Atlantic Cable, containing several interesting items of intelligence. It is dated the 30th, and would have been in time for yesterday's paper had not the Nova Scotia office closed too early on Wednesday evening to admit of its being sent through to New York.

This first news dispatch through the cable, though not very important in itself, will serve to give an idea of the daily practical uses which the Atlantic Telegraph will perform, when fairly in operation. It embraces news from Bombay, to July 19th, practically bringing us within thirty-eight days of British India, and in all probability the time will, in the course of a year or two, be reduced to three or four days by the completion of the submarine and other telegraph lines now in contemplation. Reference is made to the contents of the London papers of Wednesday, and also to the sailing of various steamers. It will soon appear as natural to read in the morning papers of occurrences that happened in Europe only the day previous, as it does now to read of those which transpire in different parts of our own country.

A dispatch from New York informs us that when the line is thrown open to business, the Nova Scotia and other offices between Trinity Bay and that city will be kept open all night, so that we shall then receive the foreign news at the earliest possible moment.

TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

Important Foreign Intelligence.

FIRST NEWS DISPATCH OVER THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

TRINITY BAY, Aug. 25.—The following news has just been received from Valentia and from its general interest I forward it to the press for publication:

VALENTIA, Ireland, Aug. 25.

Later and highly important intelligence has been received from China. A treaty of peace has been concluded with China, by which England and France obtain all their demands, including the establishment of embassies at Pekin, and indemnification for the expense of the war.

Later Indian news is at hand. The dates from Bombay are to July 19th. The accounts represent that the mutiny was being rapidly quelled.

To-day's London papers have a long and interesting report by Mr. Bright, the Atlantic Telegraph Company's Engineer.

The Royal Mail steamship Asia, with the mails for Halifax and Boston, is to be dispatched from Liverpool on Saturday next.

The screw steamer North American, with the Canadian mails, was to leave Liverpool to-day for Quebec and Montreal, and the United States mail steamer Pelton, for New York, was to be dispatched from Southampton to-day.

New York, Aug. 26.—The above dispatch was received at Trinity Bay at about 9 o'clock last night, and would have been here in ample time for publication in the morning papers, had the lines in Nova Scotia not closed at 9 o'clock. We understand that after the cable is opened for business, all the land lines will remain open night and day, and the speedy laying of a cable from Placentia Bay, N. F., to Sydney, N. S., or Portland, Me., will obviate much of the delay and uncertainty in transmitting business between New York and Trinity Bay.

Carl Gant Voort, Former Opera Singer, Sues Wife

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 26.—Carl Gant Voort, former opera singer and now a motion picture actor, today filed suit for divorce against Anne Gant Voort, an actress, whom he charged with desertion.

"Con" Shea Is Freed of Auto License Charge

Cornelius "Con" Shea, before Judge Joseph W. Schulman in the Englewood court yesterday, was discharged on a charge of having a wrong license plate on his automobile.

Shea testified he did not know who had put the license on his car.

GIRL ROBBED BY ALLEY THUGS OF $1,200 PAYROLL

College Fund Taken from Cashier.

Two shabbily dressed men, darting suddenly from an alley about noon yesterday, robbed Miss Marion O'Halla, 18 year old cashier of the National College of Chiropractic, 20 North Ashland boulevard, of $1,200, the weekly pay roll of the institution.

Miss O'Halla had drawn the money from the Reliance State bank at Madison street and Ashland boulevard, only about 100 yards south of the college.

Dart from Alley.

She carried the money in a large manila envelope under her arm, as had been her custom for more than two years. Just as she was turning into the offices of the college the two men darted from an alley behind her. One pushed and another jerked her arm, seized the money, and then both fled back into the alley and disappeared.

The girl ran screaming into the offices of her employers.

"I saw two men run out of the alley behind me," she later told the police. "One of them pushed me until I nearly lost my balance. The other grabbed the money and then both of them ran back into the alley."

Miss O'Halla was completely unnerved. She could give no description of the men except to say that they were shabbily dressed.

Aim at Policeman.

Three men and a woman were arrested by the West Park auto squad early yesterday when one of the men leveled a revolver at Sergt. Fred Blank as he started to question them.

The four were seated in an auto parked near Jackson and Ashland boulevards. As the police car drew alongside, John Perta, 1711 West Madison street, whipped out a revolver and pointed it at Sergt. Blank's head. As he did so, Elizabeth Godwin, 25, 817 Cornelia street, sitting beside Perta, threw her arms about him and seized his arm.

The policemen drew their revolvers and Perta dropped his weapon.

The other two men in the car were B. B. Jones, 1736 West 30th street, and John Kearns, 1711 West Madison street. Mrs. Godwin said she had been invited to ride by the men, whom she met at Lake and Wood streets. All four are held.

CHI-COOK FAIR

ONLY 10 MILES WEST OF THE LOOP MAYWOOD ONLY 10 MILES WEST OF THE LOOP

"AMERICA'S GREATEST COUNTY FAIR"

Every Day and Night Until Midnight, Labor Day

What'll We Do Today?

Hop into the "Old Bus"—or the new one—and take your family or your friends out to enjoy the merriment and thrills of an old-fashioned County Fair modernized and brought to the door of Chicago. If you haven't an auto, take the surface line or the "L"—either will land you almost at the gates. Plenty of room for free parking of your car on the 365-acre tract, famous as Checkerboard Flying Field. Take your lunch with you if you prefer, or get good, wholesome "eats" on the grounds. Make a picnic of your visit to the Great Fair.

You Mustn't Miss It!

Chi-Cook Fair-land is a metropolis of vari-colored tents—big ones and little ones—rimmed by the beauties of the Forest Preserve. You simply mustn't miss it!

Now is your opportunity to combine the pleasures of a day in the country with the fun and thrills and novelty of the Nation's Greatest County Fair.

It Is the Farmers' Fair

Cook County's progressive farmers are supporting the Chi-Cook Fair. Chicagoans must see the Fair to appreciate the importance of their County.

For All the Family

The program provides for the entertainment of every member of the family—for dad, mother, the kiddies and all the cousins and uncles and aunts. Nothing that does not lend itself to cleanness and wholesomeness can be found at the Chi-Cook Fair.

Running Races Every Day

Kings and queens of the western turf are entered for the running races—a bunch of well matched races every day. The Chi-Cook Fair revives in this community horse racing of the highest type.

Today's Program

Automobile Day.
Parade from Loop to Fair Grounds.
Novelty Automobile Contest.

Great Air Derby and Flying Circus

Many of America's most celebrated aviators will compete in races over the "Sky Track"—dashes and long-distance races. See the death-defying flyers in their loops and spins and general air-somersaulting. Parachute drops from dizzy heights will lend to the thrill. Ethel Dare, small in stature but big in courage, will give daily exhibitions of her skill and daring as a parachute jumper. The flying feature alone is worth ten times the price of admission.

A World of Other Features and Novelties

Great agricultural and live stock exhibits covering forty acres of space—the greatest auto show in the history of the county—Powers' Kiltie Band from Canada, all togged out in Highland duds—twenty-five big feature shows and riding devices, including the Ferris Wheel, the Giant Seaplane, the "Gorgeous Whip," Merry-Go-Rounds, and just about everything else in the approved list.

WEEKS APPROVES CURRY BILL ON ARMY OFFICERS

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Secretary of War Weeks, in a report sent today to Representative Kahn (Cal.), chairman of the house military affairs committee, indorsed the bill introduced by Representative Curry [Cal.] to amend the army appropriation act so as to prevent compulsory retirement from the army of thousands of its ablest and most efficient officers in the upper grades.

Secretary Weeks, while he still maintains the minimum strength of officer personnel of the regular army should be 13,000, accepts the Curry bill, which provides for the present strength at 12,000 as a great improvement over the legislation on this subject that was included in the army appropriation bill.

Curry Bill an Improvement.

"In all respects," said Secretary Weeks, "I believe the Curry bill to be a material improvement over the existing legislation and it would be gratifying to the department to see it enacted into law.

"As I understand it, its purpose is to leave unchanged the principles of the act it amends, but to make certain changes. Section 1 decreases somewhat the authorized number of lieutenants and correspondingly increases the various grades above. It has long been the conviction of the war department that the apportionment of officers to the various grades as fixed by the national defense act as amended, June 4, 1920, was not necessarily correct for the army of the size contemplated by the act.

High Standard for Officers.

"The reduced officer body must be of the highest standard. The important overhead duties and the development of preparedness through the various agencies contemplated by the national defense act, such as national guard, the organized reserves, the reserve officers' training corps and the civilian military training camps, continue with regard to the reduced enlisted strength of the regular army.

"The present law would necessitate a reduction to near 11,000, and in the process of making it many officers, more especially in the middle grades, who cannot well be spared, would be removed from the active list."

Safety Vault Chief Freed on Check Charge

W. P. Dickinson, Geneva, Ill., president of the Masonic Temple safety deposit vaults, was discharged when arraigned before Judge Lawrence B. Jacobs in the South Clark street court yesterday on a charge of operating a confidence game.

Dickinson was arrested on a warrant obtained by H. R. Schlytter, a banker in Milton, Mont. Schlytter charged that Dickinson gave him checks amounting to $250 and that they returned marked "insufficient funds."

JAPAN ROBS PORT OF VLADIVOSTOK TO BOOST DAIREN

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Japan is putting into execution a plan to reduce the Russian port of Vladivostok to second rate commercial importance by diverting traffic of the Chinese Eastern railroad from Harbin southward to Chang Chun and thence to the Japanese port of Dairen, according to official reports to the American government today.

The Japanese government, according to an administration official, expect to achieve this result through two measures:

1. The abolishment of preferential rates from Harbin to Vladivostok and the substitution of preferential rates from Harbin to Dairen.

2. The changing of the Chinese Eastern railway from Harbin to Chang Chun from the wide Russian gauge of 5 feet to the standard gauge of 4 feet 8½ inches, to conform to the standard gauge tracks of the South Manchurian railway from Chang Chun to Dairen.

The first of these steps has been taken, according to reports received today, through the conclusion of an agreement between the Chinese Eastern railway and the South Manchurian railway.

The second step has not yet been taken, but reports just received unmistakably indicate that the Japanese government, through the South Manchurian railway administration, has taken preparatory measures in this respect.

The economic reasons for Japan's desiring the change are obvious. The political arguments for the change are no less obvious. By changing the railroad gauge from that employed by the Russians, Japan's sphere of influence will be advanced 200 kilometers northward, from Chang Chun to Harbin.

Terms on Lots:
20% cash, $10 monthly

"When your lot is paid for we will help finance the building of your home."

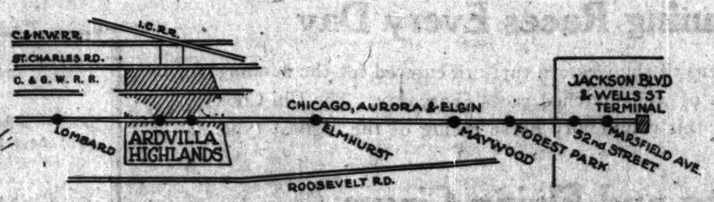
12½c FARE

FORTUNATELY we have secured one of the few spots around Chicago where the man of modest means can found his home in an all-American community at a reasonable cost—and subject to liberal terms—and it is our privilege to offer this opportunity to Chicago's thousands of home-seekers.

Ardvilla Highlands is a delightful built-up community that has been developed through its natural beauties and ideal location during the past several years—without advertising or any organized effort to sell the property. The residents are people like yourself—good citizens who appreciate the ultimate satisfaction and economy of owning their own homes—and bringing up their families in an environment that is free from physical and moral hazards.

We offer generous sized lots in this fine community—averaging 50x200 feet—at prices ranging from $335 to $800 each. They are well wooded with fifteen year old trees, improved with water, gas, electricity, sidewalks, etc. The most distant part of the property is only three blocks from the Aurora, Elgin and Chicago station.

This property is restricted to residence purposes—an eighth grade school is located in the center of the property and a district high school covering a 20 acre campus—with gymnasium, swimming pool, etc.—is within a 10 minute walk. Titles to every lot are guaranteed by Chicago Title & Trust Company. Roosevelt Road and St. Charles Road offer an open improved highway to the city—and to other suburban points west.



WE heartily urge every potential home-owner of modest means to investigate this proposition now—without obligation, and at our expense. Bring the left hand coupon to the Aurora & Elgin Terminal at Jackson Boulevard and Wells Street, Marshfield Avenue, or Laramie Avenue—any time Sunday. Our representative, wearing a white badge, will provide you with transportation—and in 40 minutes you will be personally verifying the desirability of Ardvilla Highlands—as we have described it. Or mail the right hand coupon for a descriptive circular giving full details of the property.

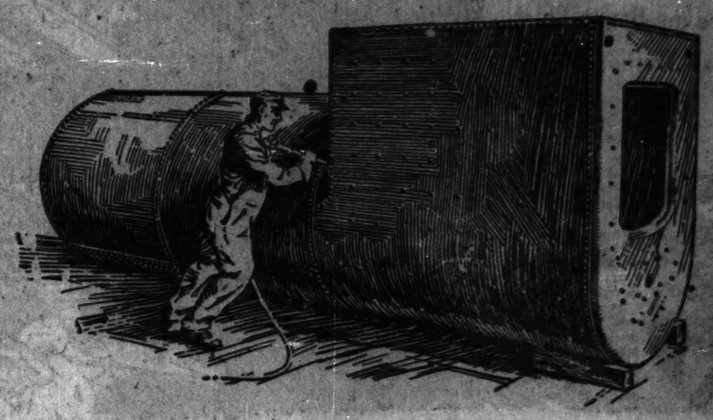
KEWANEE



Steel—Plus Rivets, Equals Strength

Show us anything stronger than steel, hydraulically riveted, and we will build Kewanee Boilers of it. Do you know any material that is better? Do you know any material that is more dependable in a boiler? Do you know of any material half as good?

Kewanee Boilers must live long. They must be capable of standing exceptional overloads when necessary. Therefore, they are built of steel-plate and where the seams are joined they are put together by hydraulic riveting machines, each operating under a pressure of from 50 to 150 tons.

Kewanee Boilers are made and assembled in the factory in one piece. They are shipped in one piece and installed in your building in one piece. They are constructed of the same material and in precisely the same way as submarines, battleships, steamships and locomotives.

If you haven't a Kewanee Boiler in your building then you haven't the strongest and best boiler made in the world. Think it over.

Write to The Old Man Behind the Boiler and ask him why steel, plus rivets, equals strength.

POLICEMAN NABS BUNDESEN; SAYS 'HE 'SASSED' HIM

Charges the Health Chief Broke Traffic Law.

Health Commissioner Herman N. Bundesen was arrested on charges of violating traffic rules and refusing to obey an officer yesterday at Michigan avenue and 12th street. He will appear in the South Clark street court Tuesday morning.

DR. HERMAN N. BUNDESEN.

The commissioner is said by the police to have failed to stop his automobile at the signal of a policeman and then to have refused to give the officer information concerning his identity.

A verbal battle between the head of the city's health department and the policeman, Joseph Ziel, a South park patrolman, ended when the officer ordered the city official to drive to the South Clark street station. There Dr. Bundesen signed a personal bond on two charges—violation of the traffic rules and refusing to obey the policeman.

Dr. Bundesen's story of the arrest differed widely from that told by the policeman. He said he was driving in Michigan avenue, on his way to the city hall.

As he drove on the 12th street intersection, he said, the policeman raised his arm and shouted to him to stop his car. He said he did this and the officer then jumped on to the running board and ordered him to the station.

Officer Ziel told the South Clark street police:

"I had raised by hand to stop north and south traffic. Dr. Bundesen shot across the street in spite of my signal. I stopped him and asked him what his name was. He said that he did not need to give me his name. He said much more and then I ordered him to drive to the station."

Engravers Will Meet in Milwaukee in 1923

LEADS FASCISTI

BENITO MUSSOLINI.
[Pacific and Atlantic Photo.]

Benito Mussolini, organizer and leader of the Fascisti, numbering more than 1,000,000 young Italians, is credited with being the most powerful man in Italy. With his organization he has fought communism and kept his country from falling into the power of the bolshevists.

ITALY CALM AS FACTIONS GIRD FOR FINISH FIGHT

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

ROME, Aug. 26.—Apparently Italy is enjoying a period of great calm. The ministers of state, senators and deputies have nearly all left Rome and gone to their homes in the provinces or to summer resorts.

Beneath the apparent calm, however, close observers say that never before were so many forces at work.

Italy is described also as a nation struggling for psychological readjustment. Because of their sensitiveness the Italian people are said to feel more than any other Europ ans the post-war oppression, and therefore they are fighting harder. If Italy succeeds in finding salvation by a radical innovation she will show the way to other nations. If not, Italy as well as other continental nations involved in the war will continue on the steep decline.

Among the forces working beneath the surface are socialism, Catholicism, which is called white socialism and hopes to unite Europe in a sort of Christian socialist state, and fascistism, which aims at the "Romanization" of Italy and seeks to teach other nations to "Romanize" themselves.

Chicago's Growth

every double line transfer corner, every steam or electric station is the Hub of a growing district

Present vacant property located near transportation is appreciating in value very rapidly. Good transportation has been the making of Chicago's most famous corners—corners like Wilson and Broadway, Madison and Kedzie, 63rd and Cottage Grove—and many others. These facts being true—consider this remarkable opportunity:

There is just one good sized piece of vacant property on the near North Side—bounded by through transportation on three sides—that is still available to homeseekers of the better class as a high grade community site. It is fully improved and restricted, of course, on a main artery of motor traffic—with business frontage at a surface line transfer corner. Naturally, there are schools, boulevards, golf grounds, churches and a shopping district near by.

This property is selling now to reliable individual buyers on a generous term basis that includes no interest the first year. Sewer, water, gas and sidewalks are now being installed as rapidly as possible. If the home and investment seekers of Chicago could only be made to understand the wonderful possibilities of this tract, every lot would be sold in 48 hours.

It costs nothing to get the facts. Full information, including terms, will be given without obligation—no annoying solicitation—all we ask is that you see the property for yourself—and follow the dictates of your own good judgment.

A Wonderful Bargain in Hot Water

All You Want – Whenever You Want It – For Less Than You Pay Now

You buy hot water like anything else. Every gallon you use costs just so much—like butter or sugar or hats or shoes. You're glad to find bargains in things of that sort—how about a bargain in hot water? There's a way to save money and at the same time provide more hot water for all the needs of your home than you've ever had before.

It's not anything new. It's something that passed beyond the trial stage years ago. Thousands of homes throughout the land are enjoying the comfort and satisfaction that goes with an abundant, dependable hot water supply and paying less gallon for gallon than they've ever paid before, since they installed a

Automatic Gas Water Heater

It's not just a question of saving money. A Humphrey Heater in your home will mean a lot more than that. Economy is important and desirable, but there is convenience, and comfort, and health to be thought of—and a constant night-and-day, summer-and-winter hot water supply insures the presence of these blessings in your home.

Only $15 Down

Brings to your home the permanent comfort, convenience and economy of a Humphrey Automatic Gas Water Heater. The first small payment gives you and your family the immediate and lasting benefit of a dependable and unlimited hot water supply—at a cost gallon for gallon cheaper than what you are paying now. For full particulars of payment plan apply to any of the Humphrey Agencies listed.

Every Time You Turn the Faucet

The Humphrey Heater gives you all the hot water you want—whenever you want it—clear, fresh water, piping hot whenever you turn a faucet. And that's all you have to do. No gas to light, no coal to stoke, no trips to the basement. And never any waiting or disappointments. Think of having an inexhaustible supply of hot water at your command—in kitchen, laundry and bath. Comes instantly, runs as long as you want it.

And you pay only for what you actually use. For the gas burns only while the water is running. When you turn off the water you turn off the gas. It's no trouble at all and there's always hot water ready—as plentiful at midnight as at noon. It's a whole lot easier to keep house with a hot water supply like that and every woman knows it.

Humphrey Guards Your Gas Bill

And what a wonderfully sharp eye Humphrey keeps on your gas bill. The moment the copper coil reaches the right degree of heat the gas ceases to burn. It is shut off automatically that very instant. And the gas does not come on again until the water falls below the desired temperature. That is why Humphrey Hot Water is so much cheaper gallon for gallon than any other kind. Once you install a Humphrey Automatic, every day is a hot water bargain day in your home.

A Humphrey For Every Home

MEN'S DOUBLES, 4:30 O'CLOCK.
Final round—Walter T. Hayes and Alex Stewart vs. Jerry Weber and Jimmy Weber.

George O'Connell, University of Oklahoma tennis star and formerly a local scholastic, meets Walter T. Hayes in the singles finals of the city net championship today on the courts of the Chicago Tennis club. O'Connell went into the final round yesterday by beating A. R. Kaiser in an uninteresting match, 6—3, 8—6, 6—2, in which the ultimate result was never in doubt.

Hayes won the right to play for the city title by disposing of Jimmy Anderson in straight sets, 6—0, 6—4, 6—2. The young star played his usual consistent game, driving well and using an effective chop, and though Hayes was master of the situation at all times the veteran was forced to exhibit good tennis to win.

Belle Women's Doubles Title.

Miss Katherine Waldo and Mrs. R. S. Stewart annexed the women's doubles championship, upsetting the dope and defeating Miss Marion Leighton and Mrs. L. E. Bailey in the final round, 8—6, 6—4.

Veteran teams of Jerry Weber and Jimmy Weber and Hayes and Alex Stewart meet today for the doubles title. The former pair emerged victors in their semi-final match yesterday over Johnsonn and W. S. Miller, 7—5, 6—3, 4—6, 6—3, and the latter team had an easy straight set victory over Ralph Burns and Kaiser, 6—1, 6—4, 7—5.

Two Marions to Meet.

The dope ran true in the women's singles, in which the two Miss Marions —Leighton and Strobel—meet today in the finals. The former, winner of western and state championships this year and seeking to add a third title to her list today, triumphed over Miss Katherine Waldo in straight 6—1 sets, and Miss Strobel defeated Mrs. R. S. Stewart, 6—4, 6—2.

ENGLISH GOLFERS IN MATCH TODAY AT LINCOLN PARK

Twenty-two years ago, J. H. Taylor, the great English golfer, paid his first visit to this country, and was runner-up to Harry Vardon, in the national open championship at the Chicago Golf club. Today J. H., as he is generally known to the golfing world, will make his second Chicago appearance, playing with Alec [Sandy] Herd, the veteran Scotchman, against Jock Hutchison and Laurie Ayton at Lincoln Park, in a 36 hole match, starting at 10 o'clock and resuming at 2:30.

Originally the Britishers were to have opposed Bob MacDonald and Chick Evans, but Bob is indisposed and Chick has gone east to play against the British amateur team at Southampton, Long Island.

Taylor and Herd will appear next Friday at Oak Park County club in their second match against Hutchison and Ayton. The public has been extended an invitation to witness the play at an admission fee of $2.00 per person. The club has gone to considerable expense to obtain the services of the players and the admission fee will be used toward defraying these charges. The match will be at thirty-six holes, and ample arrangements will be made to take care of all visitors who may wish to spend the day at the club.

SEEK TO INTEREST CHURCH MEMBERS IN SPORTING PAGES

SEEKING to interest its members in the sporting pages of newspapers, the Church Athletic association has offered prizes for the most complete set of newspaper clippings in which the association and its activities are mentioned. Competition is open to any member of a church affiliated with the association, and first and second prizes will be awarded to women and men.

The official clipping book of the association, kept by Alex Trostrud, vice president in charge of the field and track division and of publicity, will be the standard from which judges will select the best books submitted by competitors.

Clippings will be made from issues of July 1, 1922, to Sept. 30, 1922, inclusive, and should be submitted to Fred P. Duerr, Graceland 1177, or Edward Dubert, Drexel 6464, during the first week of October.

The Inquiring Reporter

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

The Tribune will pay $5 each for questions which are accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send in your name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter, Chicago Tribune." No questions will be returned. For today's question A. E. Morgan, 5456 Greenwood avenue, Chicago, was awarded $5.

The Question.

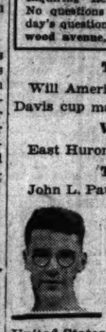
Will America again be victor in the Davis cup matches?

Where Asked.

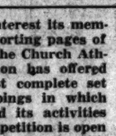
East Huron and St. Clair streets.

The Answers.

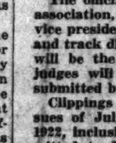
John L. Paul, 232 East Huron street, salesman—Australia is now the runnerup in the international final matches, but in the recent United States championship matches Australia did not make a very good showing against second class United States players. This, to me, indicates that the first class players of the United States will not have a very difficult task in winning.



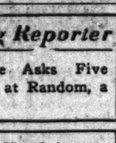
Albert Lahiquist, 673 North Michigan avenue, salesman—If J. O. Anderson is unable to represent Australia in the coming matches with the United States players, Australia will have very little chance with the American representatives. I cannot see the faintest chance for Australia without Anderson, as O'Hara Wood is far below the first class American players.



G. D. Millikin, People's Gas building, insurance—I think that Johnson and Tilden are the two greatest players of the world, and I feel sure they will win their singles matches, and I feel nearly sure Tilden and Richards will win the doubles match. My opinion, judging from the performance of the players in past contests, the close will be four out of five matches for America.



C. D. Freeburn, 5342 Kenmore avenue, engineer—Basing my opinion entirely upon the past performances of the players in the present Davis cup matches, I am firmly convinced that Tilden and Johnson will win in the singles matches, and I also believe that Tilden and Richards will win in the doubles.



Clyde Hershey, 8 East Grand avenue, airplane mechanic—I don't see why America shouldn't retain the Davis cup. At the present time the American players are on an equal basis with any of the contestants, I think America stands as good a chance as any one entered. O'Hara has made such a showing here lately that Tilden and the rest of them will have to play some tennis to beat him. I'll tell the world.

*Friberg batted for Aldridge in eleventh.

Philadelphia	000 000 000 03—3
Chicago	000 000 000 00—0

Two base hits—Krug, Terry, Williams [2], Henline, Fletcher. Three base hit—Walker. Struck out—Aldridge, 5; Meadows, 1. Time—1:49. Umpires—Rigler and Hart.

BY FRANK SCHREIBER.

Try as hard as he can, Vic Aldridge seems unable to put over his seventeenth victory of the season. Vic won his sixteenth game two weeks ago, and for the last ten days has tried to put across No. 17, but in three starts has been defeated. Yesterday Aldridge hooked up with Lee Meadows, ace of Wilhelm's staff, in a hurling duel that went big for ten innings, but in the eleventh Aldridge weakened and the Phils put on a big attack of extra base knocks that netted a 3 to 0 victory.

Aldridge was great for ten innings, holding the Phils to three well scattered blows. Meadows had the Bears stopped with four hits for the eleven innings. The bespectacled Philly hurler was a bit more liberal with his passes than the Cub, however.

Grimes Passed in Pinch.

Meadows probably saved himself from defeat in the ninth inning when with two out and Terry on second base by virtue of a double, he walked Grimes, who had gone hitless, but seemed to be getting the range. Marty Callaghan fulfilled Meadows' expectations of making the third out all right, his weak roller sending the contest into extra innings and disappointment for the home crowd.

Two errors were chalked against the Bears, one of which, by Charley Hollocher in the eleven, aided the Phils to their second and third tallies. On a whole the fielding of both nines was above the average. Hollocher, Terry, and Grimes pulled sensational infield stunts, while Hack Miller was the whole show in the outfield.

Old Cy Williams stepped around the center garden for the Phils like a 2 year old colt and grabbed off three drives that would have caused a lot of trouble.

Williams Heavy Hitter.

Williams led the Phils' hitting assault with two doubles, while Henline was next in line with a double and single. Walker's lone hit was a triple, while Fletcher contributed a double. Both blows came in the eleventh. Terry and Krug did all of the Cub hitting, each getting a single and double.

That fatal eleventh started with Rapp fouling out. Then Williams tore off his second double and scored on Walker's triple. Hollocher's boot allowed Walker to count and sent Parkinson to first. Park cantered home on Fletcher's double to deep right center.

MANY UPSETS IN METROPOLITAN MEET IN JERSEY

Jersey City, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—With a heavy track as a result of constant rain, the Metropolitan A. A. U. senior track and field championships were contested at Pershing field here today. In the 100 yard dash Bob McAllister tripped and fell three yards from the finish, Eddie Farrell, New York A. C., winning in :10. The fall did not injure McAllister, but put him out of the race.

Boots Lever, University of Pennsylvania sprinter, wearing New York A. C. colors for the first time, took second place.

Tom Farrell, former New York A. C. hurdler and all around athlete, furnished a big surprise by defeating Harrison Thompson of Princeton in the 120 yard high barriers in :16 2-5. The one mile run produced another upset, William Thompson of New York A. C. defeating Sid Leslie and Walter Higgins. Ed Kirby of the Newark A. C. also outran the veterans and took second place, about five yards behind the winner.

Bill Plant, Morningside A. C., won the three mile walk by more than ten yeards from Joe Pearman of the New York A. C. Plant's time was 21 minutes 56 2-5 seconds, breaking the record. The old record was 22 minutes 1-5 second, made by Plant in the 1920 championships.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—By employing their bats in conjunction with some of Urban Faber's best hurling, the White Sox brought themselves back to life today and whipped the Mackmen, 8 to 0. That was the only decision reached in a scheduled double header, the first game having been delayed until Monday by a downpour shortly after the noon hour.

Mack employed three hurlers without success. Fred Heimach, a southpaw, careened to the showers in the first inning, mauled for five hits and three runs. Then the elongated Bryan Harris tried his luck for four innings. He was neither good nor bad. Lastly came a youngster named Eckert. Against this trio the Sox peeled off fifteen hits, two being homers by Earl Sheely.

Faber in Great Form.

Faber's work was so exceptional that the Macks really never had a chance after the first inning. They hopped on the big redhead for only six scattered hits. Not a hostile even reached third base, and only three traveled as far as the half way station. Incidentally, Urban enjoyed flawless support.

Johnson started the ball rolling in the opening frame with a double to left. Collins and Sheely then singled, the latter's blow sending Johnson home. Mostil could not produce, but Falk came through with his first hit in five games, scoring Collins and Sheely. McClellan also singled, but it did not produce anything.

Harris held the Sox during the second and third but in the fourth he and his mates reverted to type and two Chicagoans counted. McClellan doubled, and when Schalk bunted, Harris heaved to third too late to catch McClellan. Faber also bunted to Harris and when Perkins dropped the ball at the plate, McClellan registered. Schalk got home on Johnson's single.

Sheely Clouting Hero.

The remaining runs were scored by Sheely. He opened the fifth with his first homer into the left field seats. In the seventh he walked, advanced on Mostil's single and a wild pitch, and scored on an out. His final appearance was in the ninth, when he again slammed the pill into the open faced stand.

Before the game members of the Penrose club visited home plate and brought with them a huge grandfather's clock and a traveling bag. The clock was presented to Bill Gleason and the bag to Ump Bill Dineen. Inside the bag were 1,000,000 paper marks, which Dineen will have to get rid of as best he can.

IN the WAKE of the NEWS

DAVIS CUP DEFENSE.

AUSTRALIA, as generally expected, has survived the preliminary tests and stands forth as challenger of America for the international tennis championship, represented by the Davis cup.

Early in the spring these visitors from the antipodes loomed as formidable and dangerous candidates to lift the cup. Even at Wimbledon, where William Tilden did not defend his world's title, but more particularly since coming to this country, the Australasians hardly have played up to what was expected of them.

American tennis followers will be greatly disappointed if the Yankee trio of Tilden, William Johnston, the diminutive Californian, and Vincent Richards do not "take" their opponents in three of five matches, necessary to keep the bowl.

It is unfortunate that illness and injuries have handicapped the Australians. We hope to see them in their best form when the final test comes. We admire their sportsmanship, and we wish them to make a most creditable showing, although, of course, we cannot wish for their victory.

Tilden appears in his usual form, Richards improved by a year's more experience, and Johnston apparently back to the game shown when he was champion—in fact, some critics like his chances against Tilden for national honors. Nothing but superlative tennis can defeat such an aggregation of net stars.

Cause of Hay Fever.

Helper H. M. recently asked for a cure for hay fever. Various remedies have been suggested. In an effort to help, O. C. G., another member of The Wake family, sends a pamphlet on "Hay Fever," by Orra G. Hesse, from which we quote a paragraph for the benefit of H. M.:

"Chiropractically, the cause of this incoordination is a subluxation of the fourth cervical vertebra, lower cervical or upper dorsal. That is, the most frequent subluxation found in cases of hay fever is the one found at the fourth cervical. The nerves going to the affected portions of the upper air passages of the respiratory tract leave the spinal cord at each intervertebral foramina, leading out on each side of the spinal column."

With all this information, H. M., it's now up to you!

Anecdote of Late Cap Anson.

The late Capt. Anson once was in a "memory party" wherein all were telling of the hardest battles of their life. Cap's was with a fellow who called him a liar. One of the group asked, "How did it come out?"

"Well, I proved to him that I wasn't a liar, all right," answered Anson.

The Snickering Ape.

The taking of life is forbidden
By the rules of the royal game,
But if all the facts could be hidden
I'd erase him just the same.

In fact, it's my earnest contention
That the deed should be classified,
And freed from the Law's intervention,
As commendable homicide.

Wherever I am, in the offing,
At water hole, sand trap, or tee,
I see him and suffer his scoffing,
This second Old Man of the Sea.

I speak of the baboon in knickers,
Unlettered and asinine,
Who's given to half suppressed snickers
At each little error of mine.

August's Compensation.

O still and silent August,
In your sweltering Sun's old rays,
Won't you give us just a breath of air
To help us tred our ways?

Can't you kill the germy house flies
Which muss up things and bite,
And shoo the pesky skeeters
Who bother us at night?

Too bad you're on the calendar,
You make life so forlorn—
The only thing you're good for
Is golden bantam corn.

Suddenly he stopped and opened a worn pocketbook, extracting several bills of large denomination until he had fished out a thin dime. DUNDEE BALKS AT WEIGHT FOR GO WITH LYNCH

Dick Curley, manager of Mike Dundee, yesterday refused to sign articles binding the match with Joe Lynch, bantamweight champion, at Michigan city on Labor day afternoon. Manager Curley consented to the match last Friday when the weight was agreed upon at 121 pounds. Yesterday Dundee's manager asserted Mike cannot make the weight and expect to beat such a tough fellow as Lynch. The money question also had something to do with it.

Anderson to Spar with Jack.

Andre Anderson, local heavyweight, and Jack Thompson, already have signed to act as Jack Dempsey's sparring partners in his exhibition, which will be one of the features of the show. Anderson was out west with the white champion and went along at a lively clip with the title holder. Thompson is a good catcher and may stay the two rounds. Three other sparring partners will be signed during the week.

Billy Wells, European welterweight, who will meet Dennis O'Keefe of South Chicago in one of the all star bouts is making a big hit with fans at the Arcade. He is fast and shifty and packs a good wallop in his right hand.

O'Keefe Needs Training.

O'Keefe, who scored a technical knockout over Vic Hirsch in the seventh round at Aurora last Friday night, appeared fat and must be in much better shape when he faces the Englishman.

COMISH PROBING ROW AFTER GO OF MISKE-FULTON

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 26.—[By the Associated Press.]—An investigation by the state boxing commission was under way today as an aftermath of the Miske-Fulton bout here last night, in which Mike Collins, former manager of Fulton, was the center of a setto featuring Fulton and his seconds.

While Fulton sat somewhat dazed in his corner after Miske had knocked him out, Collins leaped into the ring and made a remark that prompted Fulton's brother and second, Whitey Fulton, to rush at Collins. Close on White's heels came Fulton himself, who started to help beat down Collins, who now is manager for Mike Gibbons, the St. Paul middleweight.

Gibbons, who had been at the ringside with Collins, leaped through the ropes and was about to intervene when a host of seconds, Referee Barton, ringside fans and police subdued the miniature riot and escorted Fulton to his dressing rooms.

Pitcher Breaks Arm by Throwing Ball with Force

Anderson, S. C., Aug. 26.—J. Ralph Ballantine, pitching an amateur game between Broadway and Eureka communities broke his arm by merely throwing the ball. Pitching hard, attending physicians say, the muscular effort in throwing the ball with great force caused a twist in the bone, causing a split-like break in his arm from the elbow to the shoulder.

WEISSMULLER, MISS GAITHER WIN AT DETROIT

Johnny Picks Up National Back Stroke Title.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—John Weissmuller's marvelous aquatic skill failed to gain him another record to add to his already lengthy string of swimming triumphs at Belle Isle today, but it did bring him a championship. The event was the national 150 yard back stroke, feature of the combined national-central A. A. U. swimming meet program here today, and the Chicago wonder sped the distance in 1:53 3-10, easily defeating his two competitors.

JOHN WEISSMULLER.

Stubby Kruger, I. A. C., former holder of the title, and Abe Seigel, also wearing I. A. C. colors, strove mightily with their teammate, but the back stroke is Johnny's favorite water pastime and he never gave them a chance.

Howell Wins Central Title.

Richard Howell, I. A. C., the big swimmer whose star first rose above the A. A. U. horizon when he defeated Norman Ross of international fame in the recent Chicago river swim, annexed the 220 yard free style Central A. A. U. title, leading Bonner Miller, also of the I. A. C., in a 2:41 4-5 finish. Johnny Kalahue, the Hawaiian waterdog, started for the finish line, but never reached it, dropping out before the race was over.

Florence Gaither brought further honor to the I. A. C. by plowing to victory in the central 330 yard free style championship for junior women, while Sybil Bauer added her bit in the central 150 yard medley, which she won handily in 2:18 1-10. Miss Gaither's time was 10:21 1-5.

Edna O'Connell Disqualified.

Edna O'Connell, I. A. C., took second place to Miss Bauer in the junior women's 150 yard medley event, and put up a good fight in the 50 yard free style swim until she was disqualified for leaving her lane and crossing ahead of the other swimmers. The race was won by Margaret Nixon of Detroit A. C.

Peter Weissmuller, brother of the famous Johnny, made a desperate attempt to live up to the traditions of the family in the 50 yard open handicap, but was forced to be content with a tie for second place with D. Nixon of the Detroit A. C. The event was won by Ed Flannigan of North West high, Detroit. Summaries:

HIGH DIVES HERE TODAY

High divers will hold forth at Edgewater Beach this afternoon, when for the first time in many years the Central A. A. U. high diving championships will be held.

A regulation 26 foot platform, with a lower height of 16 feet—both large enough for the performers to do their stunts running or standing—has been erected. Bob Pearson, recently a member of the Panama Canal zone team, now competing for the I. A. C., is doing great work from the high platform, and will give Billy Heyn and Halvorsen of the C. A. A. a run for the title. J. J. Davin, formerly of the New York A. C., will also compete.

LILLIAN STODDART FIRST IN 3 MILE EASTERN SWIM

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Miss Lillian Stoddart, young and promising mermaid of the Women's Swimming Association of New York, won the annual three mile race for women under auspices of Riverton Yacht club in the Delaware river, from Bridesburg to Riverton, this afternoon. Other place winners were:

Eleanor Chi, Philadelphia, second; Margaret Bavior, Philadelphia, third; Ethel Baker, Women's Swimming association of New York, fourth; Catherine Brown, same club, fifth.

The winner's time was 39 minutes 1 3-5 seconds, very fast for the high wind and lack of flood tide running. Miss Hilda James, noted English mermaid, did not compete in the marathon. She gave an exhibition in the 300 yards event.

YANKS BACK IN LEAD; WIN OVER BROWNS BY 9 TO 2

New York, Aug. 26.—New York seesawed back into the American league lead today by half a game, drubbing St. Louis, 9 to 2. The Yankees scored in every inning but the first and third, hitting effectively against both Wright and Bayne. Schang had three sacrifices, twice scoring runs with sacrifice flies. Maya bruised several fingers on his right hand while stopping Gerber's hot drive in the seventh, but finished, the Browns hitting him for two doubles and three singles in the last two innings. Sisler carried his batting streak to his twenty-fifth game when he singled in the sixth inning. Score:

HEILMANN BREAKS COLLAR BONE AS TYGERS WIN, 8-5

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—Detroit defeated Washington in a loose game today, 8 to 5. It was a costly victory for Detroit, however, as Harry Heilmann, in a collision at first base with Brower, had his collar bone broken and is probably out for the rest of the season. Brower stopped to take a throw at the instant Heilmann reached first, and as a result the latter went into the air, nearly turning a complete somersault and landing on his right shoulder. Brower was also injured about the legs and had to be carried from the field. Score:

CRACK CUEISTS TRAIN TO MEET JAKE SCHAEFER

New York, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—It is now virtually assured that the three leading professional balk line billiard players of Europe will compete in the international 18-2 championship tournament here early in November for the title now held by Jake Schaefer.

Word has been received at the Brunswick-Balke-Collender company's offices here to the effect that Roger Conti, the young champion of France, will not have to undergo another physical examination for military service until February at the earliest, and that Conti can come to the United States.

Word has also been received from Erich Hagenlaucher, champion of Germany, that he is already making preparations to come here early next month. Edouard Horemans of Belgium, champion of Europe, did not leave this country during the so-called off season, but has been engaged in exhibition work in the middle west and Canada. He is reported in fine stroke.

Willie Hoppe, who intends to return to competitive billiards if the new conditions are satisfactory, has already begun preparation. He is training himself into physical condition.

DAD MOULTON, DEAD LEAVES $4,000 WILL IN HIS WATCH CASE

PALO ALTO, Cal., Aug. 26.—Executors of the estate of E. W. (Dad) Moulton, noted athletic trainer of Stanford university, who died July 19, opened his watch and took from it his last will and testament which was written on a little circlar piece of paper and pasted on the inside of the case. The will left an estate valued at $4,000 to his widow, Ida L. Moulton.

TEST TENNIS METTLE IN CITY CHAMPIONSHIP PLAY TODAY

WALTER HAYES. MISS MARION LEIGHTON. MISS MARIAN STROBEL. GEORGE O'CONNELL.

Age and youth renew their never ceasing feud today when Walter T. H. Hayes and George O'Connell clash on the courts of the Chicago Tennis club for the city men's singles championship. Hayes, a veteran of years, is still one of the leading players in the middle west, and scored easy victories in the city tourney to reach the championship round. O'Connell, a young University of Oklahoma star and former Chicago scholastic, encountered more difficulty in reaching the finals than experienced by his older opponent, but the youthful challenger, if at the top of his game, is conceded an excellent chance of giving Hayes a hard fight. Miss Marion Leighton is seeking to win her third championship within a year today, when she meets Miss Marion Strobel for the women's city singles honors. Miss Leighton this season annexed western and state championships, and a hard fought match is assured when she meets Miss Strobel.

HORNSBY GETS NO. 31 AS GIANTS BEAT CARDS

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 26.—New York Giants made it two in a row, taking today's game from St. Louis, 8 to 7. The victory increases the champions' lead in the pennant race to six and one-half games. Doak held the visitors to two hits in the first five innings, but weakened in the sixth. Five home runs featured the contest, including Hornsby's thirty-first of the season. Score:

Redlegs Treat Braves to Pair of Spankings, 5-3, 3-1

Cincinnati, O., Aug. 26.—Though outbatted in each contest, the Reds won both games of the double header from Boston Nationals today, 5 to 3 and 2 to 1. Houlihan, a recruit, started the first game for Boston and allowed only five hits in six innings, but was very wild, giving seven bases on balls. Duncan for the Reds and Roser, recruit outfielder for the Braves, batted strongly. Scores:

...ALINOIS WINS IN ...RACINE CRUISE OF YACHT FLEET

Racine, Wis., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Intrepid led the fleet of Chicago yachts in the race from that city to Racine today for the annual Chicago-Racine-Milwaukee regatta to be held here Sunday. Intrepid was closely followed by the yacht Illinois, with Columbia following a half hour later, and Mavourneen and Springtime entering an hour after the winner had anchored. Intrepid and Illinois made the trip in 13 hours.

The yachts had fair wind portions of the time, but had to do considerable tacking, the wind shifting or dying down at times.

Motor boats of Chicago arrived early, as did motor boats and yachts from Milwaukee. The regatta Sunday will have sixty entries, both of yachts and motor boats, representing several cities in the different events.

Illinois Is Victor.

E. Johnson's sloop Illinois won the race, its time for the sixty-two miles being 9:00:10. Gust Nylund's Spring Time was second, five minutes astern of Illinois, and L. J. Lambin's Invader was third. Prather's class P sloop Intrepid was victor in the Universal class.

Virginia Loses Mast.

Virginia was dismasted off Wilmette and was towed back to Chicago. Neoga ripped its mainsail and came in under power.

Seneca and St. Claire were expected to cross the line before midnight.

FIFTEEN YACHTS START

Fifteen of the fastest yachts on Lake Michigan broke through the gap at Belmont harbor yesterday morning in the teeth of a stiff north breeze for the annual race to Racine.

At the end of the first hour the yachts were widely scattered, tacking northward, and making slow progress. Later the wind lightened and shifted to northwest, then back to north and turned northwesterly. The chances were that the boats would not reach Racine until a late hour tonight.

Of Wilmette the racing yachts encountered a half gale and a terrific sea. In the heavy wind the Virginia, while well up and carrying most of her canvas, snapped her mast in half, and carried away everything. Flounder...ing while the wreckage was chopped away, she hoisted light canvas and fought her way in shore where a power boat from Wilmette went out and towed her back to Belmont harbor. St. Clair also was forced to put about and run for the home shelter, while the others battled northward.

At noon a fleet of thirty-five power boats left Racine, where the carnival is in progress, for a run down the lake to meet the yachts and escort them on the inward bound voyage.

...ARATOGA 3 YEAR OLD TITLE RACE HALTED BY RAIN

...Saratoga Springs, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—A heavy downpour shortly after midnight today, removed the last vestige of hope that the Saratoga track would be conditioned for the special championship battle of the three year olds this afternoon. One of the conditions of the race was that there should be a fast track, and it will not be run over any other way. The race will be postponed until Tuesday and if the track is not fast on that day, Belmont Park will get it on Labor Day.

...Should the race be held Tues...day, it is doubtful whether Whiskaway, considered one of the 3 year old crowned heads, will be able to start. Advices from the Clark stables indicate that the colt is in bad condition and it is not likely he will be permitted to race soon.

This will be the first time the Grand American has been held in the east for twenty years. Among the first 250 entries received were 72 Pennsylvanians, 30 from New Jersey, and 30 New Yorkers.

Hayes and Kirkwood Lose Maplewood Match

Maplewood, N. H., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—Walter Hagen and Joseph Kirkwood defeat today when they played against D. E. Miner, professional at Maplewood, and Peter O'Hara of Westinwoods in an exhibition golf match at Bethlehem, N. H., 3 up and 2 to go. Their cards follow:

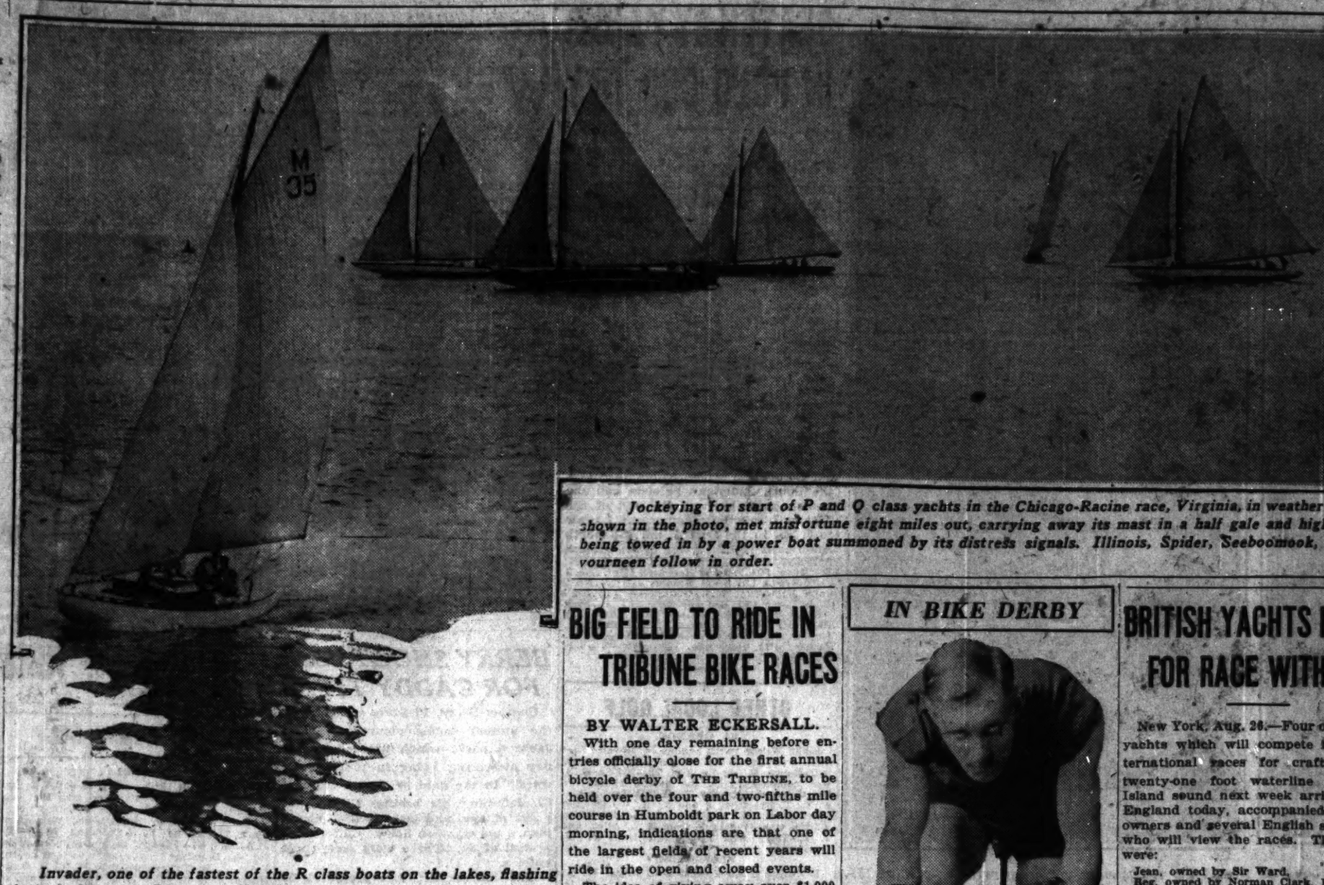
OFF ON RACE FROM CHICAGO TO RACINE



Jockeying for start of P and Q class yachts in the Chicago-Racine race, Virginia, in weather position, shown in the photo, met misfortune eight miles out, carrying away its mast in a half gale and high sea and being towed in by a power boat summoned by its distress signals. Illinois, Spider, Seeboomook, and Mavourneen follow in order.

How Dempsey Trains as Told To Hugh Fullerton

ARTICLE IV.

Speed, of eye, of hand, of foot, mark the difference between a real champion and the near champion. In football, tennis and boxing it is speed; quickness to see the opening, quickness of hand and foot to obey the eye and brain that wins.

The quickness, amounting almost to instinct, by which a boxer sees an opening in the guard of an opponent, the quickness with which the football player sees and dives at a sudden opening in the line, the quickness with which the tennis player sees the adversary leaving open a spot on the court, is uncanny to the novice.

Tennis a Strenuous Sport.

Those who hold to the old idea that tennis is a weakling game perhaps will be surprised to know that the training for the big tennis matches calls for the development of more speed and more stamina than for boxing, or for any other sport, not excepting college rowing which demands greater endurance than either.

The fact that many boxers have taken up tennis as a big part of their training for speed of eye and for foot work may be a surprise. Bennie Leonard was one of the pioneers in tennis and after he had studied the work of Bill Tilden and Vinnie Richards, he requested them to give him instruction and uses tennis steadily, both indoor and outdoor, and squash as part of his training.

Handball Good for Speed.

The old favorite of the old timers still remains popular. That is handball, which was used by John L. Sullivan and more extensively by Jim Corbett for getting speed of foot and hand, quick starting and stopping. Baseball players also are partial to handball, the New York Giants and Detroit Tigers especially.

Footwork in boxing and football is considered the prime essential to the sports. Among the fundamentals in training college football players is footwork. Maj. Graves, Maj. Daly, Foster Sanford and Bill Roper of Princeton start the training by teaching men to hold their feet and to keep steady while dodging, but the teaching is confined to playing.

Jack Dempsey's exercises for training his eyes will be treated separately although the eye is the directing element in all speed. His work for conformation is blended with his work for speed alone.

Train for Speed—Use Care.

With the training for speed the greatest care is necessary. The huge danger to football, tennis, baseball and boxing masters is from hardening muscles. Nothing slows an athlete so quickly as does overtrained muscles—muscle binding. With baseball players the muscles most in danger are those of the back of the leg and the heavy shoulder muscles of the throwing arm.

Loose, flexible muscles are essential to good work and to speed. The athlete training for speed must watch closely for signs of hardening. The quick starting and stopping, the fast footwork all bring risk of displacing hardened muscles; the "Charley horse" of the ball player. A muscle once displaced may be corrected, but it never gets back full strength.

Dempsey has one of the most perfect systems for avoiding muscle hardening I have discovered. He has found the secret of "relaxing" and of running, jumping, and hitting without extreme tension of the muscles.

Avoid Muscle Binding.

"It was natural at first," he says, "I made mistakes, of course, but must have been lucky, for the natural way of doing a thing seems to be the right one. When I commenced to study myself and training methods there were a lot of things with which I quarreled.

"I got one big idea from a golf professional. He was teaching me to swing a club without tensing the muscles or tightening up and I figured that I could hit harder that way on boxing. The majority of fellows tighten up, stiffen every muscle before delivering a hard blow. It is best to hit with the whole weight and follow with the fist just as with a club.

"The big thing to avoid is muscle binding, yet one has to work hard to get in condition, and there is a risk. For footwork tennis is great, handball is good, and dancing, if you dance easily, is one of the best exercises.

Ride Bicycle Upside Down.

"I use a little jig dancing, very fast at times and to avoid strain it is good to rest on your shoulders, with the legs in the air, and pretend to ride a bicycle upside down, working the legs as rapidly as possible.

"For speed of hand I like bag punching, and it also helps the eye a great deal. In fact, for speed of eye and hand they must work together. Bag punching makes a fellow work fast with his hands and in punching the bag I keep moving around on the feet hitting from different angles."

In the next article Dempsey's system of training the eye and hand and foot to work together will be explained.

JACK DEMPSEY'S RULES

Here are some simple rules of training as laid down by Dempsey:

Work for flexible muscles, avoid straining and speed will come.

Avoid "tightening up" muscles in quick action.

Swing with the natural motion and follow through.

Judge whether you are working right by the way you feel. Healthy muscles get tired, but unhealthy ones give pain.

Overtraining is not training.

BIG FIELD TO RIDE IN TRIBUNE BIKE RACES

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

With one day remaining before entries officially close for the first annual bicycle derby of THE TRIBUNE, to be held over the four and two-fifths mile course in Humboldt park on Labor day morning, indications are that one of the largest fields of recent years will ride in the open and closed events.

The idea of giving away over $1,000 in merchandise prizes apparently has appealed to the riders, who have been training ever since the event was announced. The experts are getting in shape by riding over long stretches of road on the northwest side, while many will go to Milwaukee today to compete in the 100 mile grind there.

Handicap Feature Race.

The Tribune derby will be featured by a twenty-two mile handicap, open to any riders in the country in good standing with the Amateur Bicycle League of America. If riders desiring to race are not members of the league, arrangement can be made to have them join the league on the morning of the races. Officials of the organization will be on hand to register the riders.

The handicap will bring together a number of well known local riders. Among these will be August Benson of the Merry Gardens A. C., who tied with Edmund Kokat of the Alverno A. A. for second place in the Illinois state championship. Benson won the five mile unpaced race in connection with the championships and led the field a merry clip. He intends to set his own pace for the twenty-two miles, and claims the other riders will have to be in shape to hang onto his rear wheel.

Class B and C Races.

In addition to the open twenty-two mile handicap, there will be an eight and four-fifths mile race for class B riders and one over the same distance for class C pedallers. Both will be scratch events and are attracting much interest.

Second place will receive a $40 check, third $35, and so on, the winner of twelfth position receiving a $5 certificate. TEN 'C' MEN BACK FOR 1922 MAROON TEAM

When the western conference football practice season opens Sept. 15, Coach Stagg of Chicago will have ten "C" men as nucleus for his 1922 eleven, which will play six of its seven games on the home gridiron.

The Maroon mentor is hopeful of developing some of last year's second string and freshmen players into varsity material. His principal task will be the development of a quarter back to take the place of Milton Romney, who was declared ineligible by the Big Ten eligibility committee. The "Old Man" has some good line and backfield material and indications are he will place a team on the field which will be a championship contender.

The letter men lost by graduation or other causes are Crisler and Halladay, ends; Cole, Hurlburt, and Neff, half backs; Tatge, quarter back, and Redmon and McGuire, linemen. The old men, who will be back, are Capt. Lewis, forward; Strohmeier, end; Fletcher, Proudfoot, Lewis, King, Dawson, linemen, and Thomas, Pyott, Zorn, and Hermes, backs.

Dependable Men from Last Year.

Among some of last year's squad whom Stagg is depending upon this year are: McMasters, Stagg Jr., Curley, Heile, Barnes, Dickson, Lampe, Gowdy, Christianson, Harry Thomas, and Frida. Other players may show varsity form as the season progresses.

Coach Stagg has sent out the annual circular letter urging the candidates to start training so that they may report for practice Sept. 15 in good physical trim. The Midway mentor asserted no time will be lost in giving the men signals and plays so that as much as possible can be accomplished before the first game is played Oct. 7 with the University of Georgia.

Although Northwestern and Purdue will be met on following successive Saturdays, the "Old Man" will undoubtedly start to point his team for the Princeton game on Oct. 28. It will be remembered the Maroons defeated the Tigers last year, 10 to 0, and Stagg will try to repeat with another victory.

One Out of Town Game.

The only out of town game will be with Ohio State at Columbus Nov. 11. Following the Buckeye struggle Illinois and Wisconsin will be the Maroon opponents.

Coach Stagg announced the following men will assist in the development of the team: Nelson H. Norgren, C. C. Jackson, Dr. Earl Huntington, Dr. Norman Paine, Jerome Fisher, C. E. McGuire, Herbert Crisler and, Dr. C. O. Molander.

Following is the complete schedule:

Oct. 7—University of Georgia at Chicago.
Oct. 14—Northwestern at Chicago.
Oct. 21—Purdue at Chicago.
Oct. 28—Princeton at Chicago.
Nov. 11—Ohio State at Ohio State.

ARGENTINE RIDERS BEATEN BY YANKS IN POLO CUP TILT

Rumson, N. J., Aug. 26.—Argentina's polo team, which came to the United States ten days ago, fresh from triumphs in England, was eliminated from the Herbert Memorial cup tournament today by the Orange County club, 13 to 10, the handicap of five conceded to the Americans being too much for the Latins.

Rated as about the equal of the American four which won the International cup from England last year, the Argentine players were disappointing. Their short stay in this country, after an unusually long voyage, with scant time to escape social fetes and get down to practice told in their team work, which, however, was appreciably better than that of the winners. The game was played on turf nearly as soft as mud.

With the handicap of five to wipe out before the scores began to count, the South American polo ists had the game almost even at the end of the first half, in which they scored 7 goals to 3, but in the second half the North Americans made 8 goals to 3. Lineup:

ARGENTINE (10). ORANGE COUNTY (13).
D. Miles (0)....No. 1 Harriman (3)....No. 1
Jack Nelson (3).No. 2 Ramsey (3)....No. 2
John Miles (3).No. 3 Stephenson (1).No. 3
L. L. Lacey (4).Back Belmont (1)....Back
Goals—Lacey (5), Nelson (3), Miles (2). Harriman (3), Ramsey (3), Belmont, Stephenson. Goals from foul—Lacey (2), Ramsey (2), Harriman. Handicap—5 goals to Orange County.

FOR PLAYERS OF WHIST

By A. R. METCALFE.

ALTHOUGH HIS CONTRACT FAILS, SCORES 60 FOR SMALL SLAM.

WHEN a player makes a bid of seven in any suit or in no trump and secures twelve tricks, he scores 60 for a small slam, although his contract fails.

This is a footnote in the laws of the whist club, New York, and is known to but few players because it does not seem to be right. It occurs so rarely that it is of little importance, but during the past week such a score was made on the north shore, and created a vast amount of discussion.

Too many players are gifted with little imagination and plod along the lines of least resistance, making the obvious play and depending upon extraordinary hands, or possibly equally poor play on the part of their adversaries. The deal which follows is given as actually played, and probably as it would be played in nearly every club in the country.

THE HANDS.

Score: 0—0.
Rubber game. West dealt and bid 1 as trump. North and east passed, south bid 2 spades, west 2 no trump and the bidding closed. North had the original lead.

THE PLAY.

Tricks.	N.	E.	S.	W.
1	3S	3S	4S	Q3
2	D2	DQ	DK	D4
3	3S	3S	10S	A5
4	D8	D9	D7	DJ
5	DA	D6	H3	D5
6	6C	7C	JC	AC
7	9C	8C	2C	D10
8	H4	8C	K3	D9
9	H6	HJ	H2	HA
10	H8	H7	H10	HQ
11	10C	KC	7S	9C

13	QC	H9	J8	4S

West secured eleven tricks.

North tossed away the rubber at trick two. It should have been easy for him to place the ace of clubs and ace of hearts in the declarer's hand, so that south could have no card of re-entry except possibly the king of diamonds. North therefore should have played his ace of diamonds at trick two and led his last spade, hoping that his partner's suit might be developed before the latter lost his only card of re-entry. There was, of course, a possible chance that south might hold the king of diamonds alone, but in that case the game was irretrievably lost and one trick of little consequence, so much for the defense.

The declarer on his part tossed away the rubber when he won the first trick with the queen of spades. With the deuce of spades in dummy it was easy to see that north could only have the trey of spades remaining. Therefore if the declarer waited until the second round he was certain to make game, unless south held both the ace and king of diamonds. The fact that two bad plays neutralized each other does not mean that the points were not lost. North and west between them lost more than 600 points in the play of this single deal, and were blissfully unaware of the fact.

Charles Berry, 13 years of age, won the annual caddie championship at Jackson park, which finished yesterday afternoon, being in progress all week. The tournament was promoted by Bob Delaware, who donated prizes for all four flights. A crowd of 1,500 followed yesterday's final.

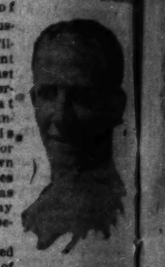
RAIN POSTPONES U. S.-AUSTRALIAN TENNIS MATCHES



Longwood, Mass., Aug. 26.—The meeting between the crack double combinations of America and Australia—W. T. Tilden and Vincent Richards against Gerald L. Patterson and Pat O'Hara Wood, antipodean Davis cup players—for the national lawn tennis doubles championship was postponed today until Monday because of rain.

The rain caused postponement of all play for today, PAT O'HARA WOOD and the national [Press Illus. Photo] veterans' doubles championship will be decided in New York, probably at the time of the Davis cup meeting.

Holcomb Ward of New York and Dwight F. Davis of Washington, donor of the cup that bears his name, one of the teams that won their way to the final round, obtained the consent of D. E. Jones and A. W. Ingraham.

The postponement made necessary the default of Mrs. F. H. Godfrey of Boston, and Wallace F. Johnston of Philadelphia to Miss Helen Wills, the girl player from Berkeley, Cal., and Howard O. Kinsey of San Francisco in the semi-final round of the national mixed doubles. The latter will now meet Mrs. Molla B. Mallory and W. T. Tilden in the final round.

This event and the national junior and boys' singles finals, together with the final match in the women's invitation singles tournament, in which Mrs. Mallory and Miss Wills are the survivors, will be played Monday.

DETROIT GOLF ON CHICAGO SYSTEM

Detroit's efforts to interest its citizens in the establishment of public golf courses modeled after the plan of Chicago park commissioners has been attended with such success the city officials estimate that 30,000 golfers played over the new Belle Isle nine-hole links in the ninety days since its opening.

Plans of the Detroit park heads include the opening of another course in the spring and the completion of three more within four years, following the success of the public links in Chicago.

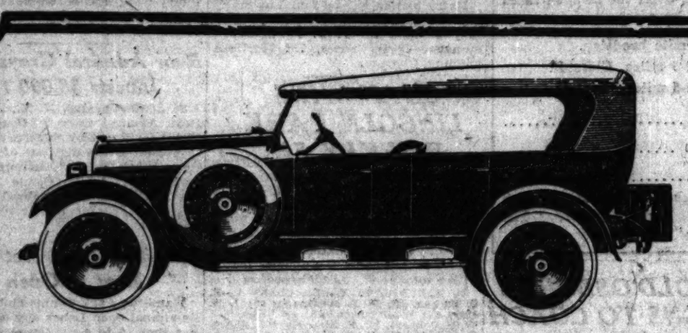
AT OTHER GOLF CLUBS.

INDIAN HILL.

A card of 77—10—67 gave C. L. Shaw first place in the handicap, the other leaders being H. R. Buts, 82—13—70; C. S. Hiller, 88—18—70; T. W. Ritchie, 85—14—71; O. H. Burton, 93—22—71.

SKOKIE.

In the sweepstakes event, W. E. Dunn and H. E. Mershon tied at 84 for the first low gross prize, and split 40 per cent; Gordon Sibley was third with 42 and took 10 per cent as his share. In the low net event Gordon Ramsey, 92—25—67, took 25 per cent; O. F. Koeche, 83—14—71, 15 per cent and I. Schiedenhelm, 81—10—71, 10 per cent.



A New Westcott Larger Six

The Car With Guest Room

Half the joy of owning either a fine home or a fine car is in being able to entertain our friends.

Here is a new car, a wonderful car, for the big-hearted, companionable man, who takes a keen delight in sharing his pleasures—the sort of man who has a guest room in his home, as a matter of course, and uses it.

What a car this is for a country dinner, a touring party, picnic, or fishing trip!

Places for seven. Nothing skimpy about them either—big seats, comfortable for a day's trip. Driving position as easy, leg room as ample as any five-passenger car.

It is a new idea in car designing, providing the extra passenger capacity so often desirable, but without sacrificing leg room and comfort, or increasing weight and up-keep cost.

Mounted on the famous Westcott chassis, noted for its average of ten years life as against the national average for all cars of six and one-half years. It is the only car having a California type permanent top as standard equipment. Keeps its handsome appearance for years. Rigid frame plate glass winter enclosure $125 extra.

The Truth About "Social" Diseases Must Be Told

IF Chicago should catch fire again, and if all good citizens, including the Fire Department, should try to hush the matter up—instead of trying to put the fire out—what would be the verdict of Public Opinion?

Of course the situation described is unthinkable.

And yet—a force quite as destructive as fire is wrecking thousands of homes in Chicago and depriving commerce and industry of millions of dollars' worth of productive energy, chiefly because men and women continue to "hush the matter up" instead of organizing to eliminate it.

Venereal disease is on the increase.

According to medical authorities, one of these diseases has already attacked more than 15 per cent of our entire population. It is responsible for eighty out of every hundred babies born dead, for twenty out of every hundred people committed to our asylums for the insane.

The other has already done damage to more than half our adult male population. It is responsible for 20 per cent of all blindness, for 80 per cent of all pelvic inflammatory disease in women.

This unfortunate state of affairs is the more tragic because the toll of suffering taken by these two diseases is utterly needless.

Among the first million men called to the colors, shortly after America's entry into the war, certain large draft groups ran as high as 35 per cent infected. The United States Medical Corps could not reject so great a number; so instead it cured them. By the time the American Army had entered Germany, the proportion had been reduced to less than one in a hundred.

Not so many years ago, untold numbers were dying every year of typhoid—smallpox—yellow-fever—malaria. Today in enlightened communities those diseases have been practically wiped out.

Chicago faces no enemy so devastating as venereal disease. That, too, should be wiped out.

It is now more than two years since the Public Health Institute (founded, not for profit, by public-spirited citizens) declared war upon "social" diseases in Chicago. It was prompted to enter the fight because its founders had been impressed by the remarkable record of the Medical Corps during the war. They believed that much the same methods were practical for continuing the fight.

The need for this institution and its power for good are evidenced by the fact that since its inception, two years ago, its ministrations have steadily increased in number, until at the present time its staff of physicians are treating every week-day approximately 800 men, women and children afflicted with "social" diseases—a monthly total of over 20,000.

With the adoption of this practical method by progressive citizens in other large cities, it is hoped that another generation will see a marked reduction in the power for evil now possessed and exercised by two of the most dangerous enemies society has ever known.

The facilities of the Public Health Institute are unequaled. Patients are examined and treated by skilled physicians, thoroly trained, whose broad experience is constantly being extended by personal contact with thousands of actual cases. The Institute maintains, as an auxiliary, the most completely equipped laboratory in America for its special work, where every diagnosis is verified by exact chemical, bacteriological and serological tests.

At the Public Health Institute the utmost privacy possible is assured. Each patient, upon registering, receives a number and thenceforward calls for his record by number only. Forty individual treatment rooms insure prompt attention.

On a different floor from the men's department the Institute maintains a separate department for women and children—with trained nurses in constant attendance, ministering to the increased comfort of the patient.

Any person coming to the Institute will find those in attendance kindly and sympathetic; he will return to his work with a heavy burden lifted, for he will know that the best that medicine affords is at work to get him well.

The cost of treatment is small, and is available on terms so liberal that any person regularly employed can afford it.

If from any cause whatsoever a person has reason to suspect infection from a "social" disease—and it should be noted that frequently a disease of this character lurks in the system for years without revealing its presence—the Public Health Institute urges the importance of an immediate examination. Even a day's delay is dangerous—not only to the patient but also to those near and dear to him.

As for the person who already knows he is afflicted, he of all people should undertake immediate treatment—the best that may be had.

For the good of the individual—and for the good of Chicago—the truth about "social" diseases must be told.

Auto Men Protest Priority Ruling in Plant Crisis

BY WHITCOMB WILLIAMS.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 26.—[Special.]—According to William W. Potter, state fuel administrator, suspension of all so-called nonessential industries in Michigan within the next two weeks is in prospect, due to fuel priority rules. If the administrator is right in his forecast, it means that practically 300,000 men in the automotive industry will be idle before September is far advanced and until coal movements can supply the national demand.

At the present time, however, none of the plans has been forced to close on account of coal. In fact they are still running at top speed, probably in an effort to produce as many cars as possible before they are forced to quit, or to at least curtail operations. A few of the more fortunate plants announce their coal bins contain sufficient fuel to last them for several weeks, but this, of course, will eventually be consumed, leaving them but one alternative—to close down.

In Detroit many of the plants are being kept in operation through increased use of Detroit-Edison company power, but as soon as that company uses up what fuel it has, not subject to priority rules, automobile concerns, classified as nonessentials—will be cut off, and thrown on their own resources in procuring enough fuel to keep their plants running.

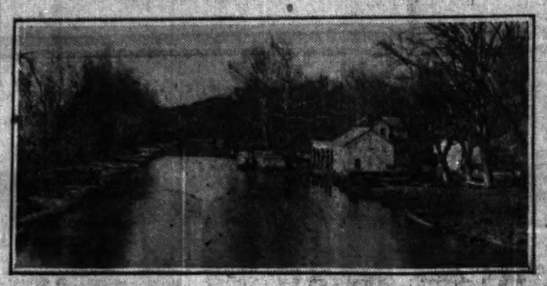
However, the automobile manufacturers of Detroit, and other producing points in Michigan, are preparing to put up a stiff battle against the ruling of the federal administration classing the industry as nonessential in the distribution of fuel. Headed by Alvan Macauley, president of the Packard Motor Car company, and backed by the head of practically every other automobile plant, the manufacturers have prepared a strong protest to be dispatched to Washington officials, contending that the motor car is equally as essential as the railroad as a means of transporting the necessaries of life.

Never before has the truck played such an important part in the commercial world, and in case of a more serious railroad tieup, the million or more trucks now in operation throughout the country will be taxed to their utmost capacity.

Production at the Ford Motor company's Highland plant, where 42,000 men are employed, will not be curtailed on account of the coal strike. When the company became satisfied it would be impossible to obtain coal from the Kentucky mines over Ford's own railroad, work started immediately to convert the fourteen great boilers into oil burners, and, according to reliable but unofficial information, orders for approximately 12,000,000 gallons of fuel oil have been placed.

Whether the burning of oil will be continued with the passing of the present coal crisis cannot be ascertained.

THE BROAD HIGHWAY



(P. & A. Photo.)

The picturesque Chesapeake and Ohio canal, which runs from Cumberland, Md., to Washington, is about to bow to the march of United States highway progress. It is to be filled in by the state and converted into a well paved highway which will connect the Lincoln Memorial in the capital with the Lincoln highway at Cumberland.

For Wider Roads.

Following close upon the action of the good roads congress in Chicago, which, in a resolution, declared for a minimum width of 20 feet for highways, and that of the Asphalt association, which took similar action, in deference to increasing traffic, the national convention of police chiefs, held in San Francisco recently, adopted a resolution demanding wider streets and roads, so as to facilitate the regulation of traffic. In cities like New York, Chicago, Boston, Providence, and others, the report declared, narrow streets not only induce accidents but are big factors in traffic tieups. A committee was appointed at the convention to work for a uniform, nation-wide code of traffic signals and regulations.

A SECOND HELPING

Is a Sign of Good Quality

Whether it's food or tires, a second helping proves quality. So many calls are received by Roy for tires advertised weeks back that he has determined to keep a complete stock of all sizes in the popular makes, but, of course, the prices may go up in the meantime. So it's your best bet to put on all steam and get down here quick when Roy goes on a tire rampage. No tires for a dollar, but more tires for every dollar you pay, is Roy's motto.

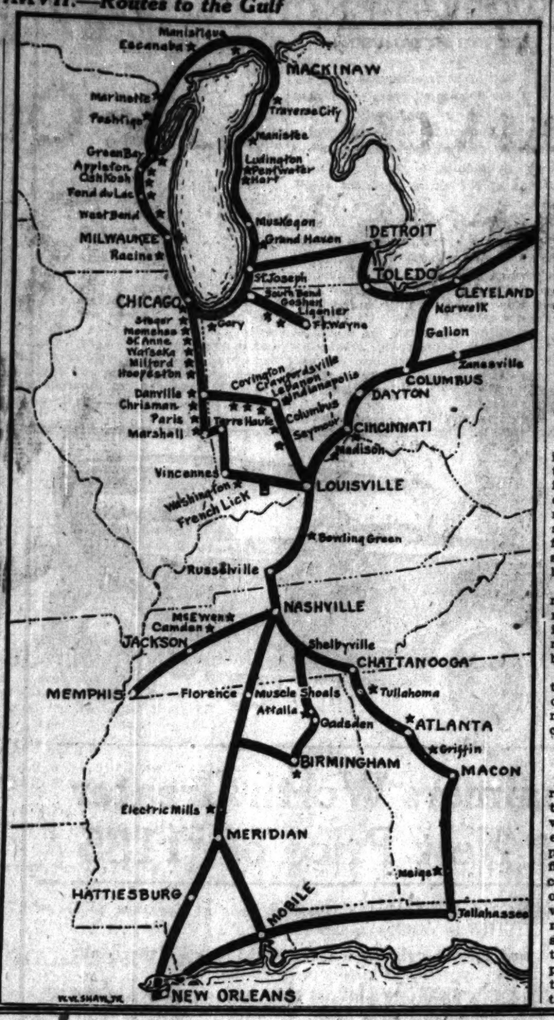
XXVII.—Routes to the Gulf



XXVII.—ROUTES TO THE GULF.

ELEVEN HUNDRED AND FOURTEEN miles of open road, winding through country as interesting as the nation has to offer, challenges the motorist this season to the fall and winter run between Chicago and New Orleans. Roads through the south are generally better than they have been at any time within the last five years, but there is still opportunity for improvement all along the line and the thousands of tourists who are just now turning back from summer playgrounds in the north will find many stretches to tax their driving ability.

The best general route to the gulf this season follows the Dixie highway south from Chicago to Danville and offers an option of two routes to Louisville. The driver may turn east from Danville on gravel and stone roads through Lebanon to Indianapolis and follow the Dixie highway south; or continue south from Danville on concrete to Marshall, turning east on pavement to Terre Haute and south from Terre Haute over gravel roads along the Dixie Bee Line highway to Vincennes and state roads east to Louisville.

From Louisville the Dixie is followed south to Nashville and the Jackson highway from Nashville to New Orleans. A summary of the roads from Louisville to Nashville shows hard surfaced mileage with some dirt stretches through hilly country, rough and badly worn in places; Nashville to Florence, five miles of macadam, ninety-six miles of gravel and sixteen miles of dirt through hilly country; to Columbus, Miss., five miles of macadam, 116 miles of gravel, twenty miles of dirt; to Meridian, forty-two miles gravel, six miles macadam, thirty-one clay and dirt, the latter bad in wet weather; to Hattiesburg, Miss., five miles macadam, thirty-four miles gravel, fifty-four miles dirt and clay, the latter very bad in wet weather.

Vehicles ferry across the Pearl river and across Lake Ponchartrain. The latter trip is made at a charge of $10. Gravel and pavement lead from the lake to New Orleans through low country.

FOR CASH.

The Russian soviet is reported as having purchased for cash a large supply of pneumatic and solid tires from a French manufacturer.

Nomads of Trail Find Revenue in Shift of Seasons

AUTOMOBILE nomads are not exactly irresponsible wanderers, nor are they excessively poor, like gypsies. They all have some sort of trade which they pursue with the help of motor cars.

In the late spring they come up from the south and in the autumn they go down south from the north. They generally have an objective point, such, for instanse, as a town in one of the Gulf states, which is generally a resort of some kind. Their dispersal toward the north is to the resorts on the Great Lakes, New York or the coast of New England.

Their ideas of geography are exceedingly hasy, and the routes they travel seem to be indifferent to them. They ask for information and will take any direction given them with gratitude, but rarely purchase itineraries or maps and their indifference to hotel accommodations is remarkable.

The class is made up of the traveling salesman who has some commodity to sell, such as spark plugs, metal polish, books, or else they are keepers of temporary shops in some southern resort in winter, a northern resort in summer, establishing their counters from year to year, sometimes in the same place, sometimes changing their base of operations.

The low price of automobiles has made all this possible, and the great majority of these travelers move about in small cars, although second hand machines of every description are used by them.

It will be very interesting to watch the development of this new element on the roads. They are increasing in numbers and this country offers ideal conditions for their development.

Why They Crack.

Moisture in the soil beneath hard roads has much to do with the life of the road, according to the state highway division. Samples of the soil taken from the subgrade of the Bates experimental road, southwest of Springfield, showed a water content of 40 per cent last spring. The bearing power of the soil in this condition was of a very uncertain nature, says the department. A load of six pounds to the square inch was sufficient to deform the soil two-tenths of an inch. Experiments are being conducted to determine the effect of this moisture on the pavement.

CADILLAC

THE man who has owned a Type 61 Cadillac for any length of time, and experienced its wonderful efficiency and dependability, is vastly more interested in its performance than in any other consideration.

He realizes every day he drives it that he has a motor car which he need not fear will fail him, and which he can rely upon to accomplish any transportation-task he may impose upon it.

He feels uniformly secure in contemplating its power, its acceleration, its dependability, its comfort and road-restfulness and any other features for which the Cadillac is admittedly famous.

This confidence-inspiring performance, he believes, is the most desirable and valuable quality in a motor car—the quality which nothing else can equal, and for whose absence nothing else could possibly compensate him.

He is quite sure that it is developed to a higher and more satisfying degree in the Type 61 than in any other automobile he has ever owned or investigated.

Consequently, he is firmly and inalienably attached to his Cadillac.

He considers Type 61 the greatest motor car performer in the world, and believes that its unequalled dependability stamps it the world's greatest motor car value.

New Marmon Phaeton surprises all

THE reception given the new 7-passenger Marmon Phaeton has been remarkable. A constant stream of people have been in to view it. And all are of one opinion: "It exceeds all expectations."

It is difficult for most people to imagine how such a beautiful and distinguished car as the Marmon could be improved. Until one actually sees the new Phaeton, it is difficult to imagine the many refinements. It establishes the coming vogue.

True, there are no glaring mechanical changes, no departures from proven superiorities. The Marmon is too fine a car to change radically.

The first glance, however, reveals the coming mode in appearance. The eye takes in lower lines. One is conscious of added grace in body moulding. Yet this added beauty is without sacrificing the Marmon's unusual passenger comfort. Then the eye takes in the new Panorama top, and observes that this is a new style all-year car, entirely different, one that brings airy openness in summer and snug sedan coziness in winter—yet always with unobstructed vision. Winter-panels cost but little extra.

Throughout, the Phaeton brings a series of surprises. In appearance, in comfort, in performance, this is the greatest Marmon of a line of successes.

Until you've seen this Marmon Phaeton, you can't appreciate the coming vogue. We invite you to come in and see it.

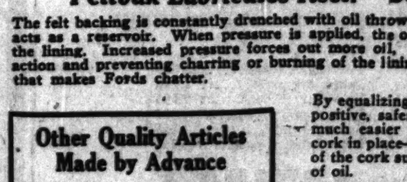
FELTBAK—

$2.75 Per Set



Fully Covered by U. S. Patents

A New Brake Lining for FORDS

Feltbak is the logical improvement of the famous cork inserted type of brake lining for Fords. Feltbak uses the unequaled friction value of cork in fabric, plus a felt backing that cushions and softens the braking action, equalizes the grip around the drum and at the same time floods the cork and fabric surfaces with oil during the braking action—just when oil is needed to prevent burning of the linings.

Feltbak Lubricates Itself—Softens the Braking Action

The felt backing is constantly drenched with oil thrown up by the fly wheel. It absorbs this oil and acts as a reservoir. When pressure is applied, the oil flows through the oil holes on to the surface of the lining. Increased pressure forces out more oil, supplying lubrication throughout the braking action and preventing charring or burning of the lining surface. It's the surface charring or glazing that makes Fords chatter.

By equalizing the grip around the drum, Feltbak gives a more positive, safer brake, makes the Ford more dependable and much easier to handle. The felt back holds the inserts of cork in place—they can't come out. The lasting friction value of the cork surface is greatly improved by the plentiful supply of oil.

Feltbak, though new to the public, is more than two years old—during which time it has been perfected through exhaustive experiments.

Drive your Ford with comfort and confidence, on the hills or in traffic. If you are a user of cork inserted linings, you will quickly appreciate the principle of Feltbak. If you have used only the ordinary linings, you can't imagine how delightfully smooth and dependably your Ford will operate with Feltbak.

Just ask your dealer for Feltbak—he has it or can get it instantly. He may offer you something else as a matter of policy, but if you insist he will supply you with Feltbak.

Miller Prepares Tiny Motor for Racing Season

Designer of Murphy's Crack Mount Enters New Competition.

BANISHING an impression among millions of automobile race enthusiasts throughout the United States and Europe that American automobile manufacturers had not contemplated competition with foreigners when the first 122 cubic inch displacement motors are to appear in 1923, Harry Miller, veteran of the industry and builder of many famous racing motors, announced from his plant in Los Angeles that he had started construction of the first two motors, an "eight-in-a-row" design.

His entrance in the Indianapolis race meet next year, when cars of this type will make their first appearance, was wired to Carl Fisher of the Indianapolis speedway and Miller was informed that his car would bear the numeral "one" as a tribute to his enterprise in making the first American entry.

Indications in Los Angeles point to other constructive efforts being made along the same line by the Packard Motor Car company and the Duesenberg interests, which have been so prominent in latter day racing history, and announcements are expected to be made by those respective manufacturers within a short time.

While Miller's announcement of his own plans may prove a suprise to race fans, they have nevertheless been under contemplation for some time, and actual construction will be under way within a very short time. Designs have been completed under his supervision, while the factory is full of interest as the casts are being prepared for the work.

The new cars will not differ in appearance materially from the general design of cars now racing on the track, save that they will be smaller in every regard except wheel base, which will remain the same, 104 inches. The frame will be narrower, twenty-two inches at the widest part, while the body will be twenty-seven inches wide to accommodate the driver. No mechanic will be carried.

Actual sizes for the motor are not yet decided upon, but the bore of two and eleven-thirty-second inches, will mean a stroke, in an eight cylinder motor, of approximately three and one-half inches. Every motor detail, from crank shaft to valves, will necessarily be smaller, but the design is along the same lines as that of the motor with which Jimmy Murphy set an unofficial world's speed record of 154.21 miles an hour on the Cotati speedway.

The weight of the car will be in the neighborhood of 1,400 pounds, and the power plant is expected to develop approximately ninety to ninety-five horsepower. Because of the low weight of the entire car, however, Miller declared that the speed would be as great, if not greater, than the cars that are being driven over the tracks today. Every part of the cars except wheels, tires, and ignition units, will be made in the Los Angeles factory. The Delco system will be used.

THE INQUIRING REPORTER

He's out to learn the truth about motordom.

The Tribune will pay $5 cash for questions which are accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send in your name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter, Chicago Tribune." No questions will be returned. For today's question Miss Charlotte E. Brown, Division and Thatcher avenue, River Forest, Ill., was awarded $5.

The Question.

Would you rather tour the United States or some other country, if given the opportunity?

Where Asked.

On Michigan avenue at Monroe street.

The Answers.

W. E. Feeley, 1163 Sedgwick street, mechanic—I'd rather tour the states. I have never seen Yellowstone National park, and I'd like to see it and a few more of our own marvels. I think we ought to patronize our home industries and see our own wonders before spending our money in Europe. Besides, I think the United States has more and better scenery than they have in Europe.

Mrs. Frances Burkhart, 624 West 71st street—I'd rather tour Europe, if given a chance like that. There are so many different countries you can see. You can go from one to the other in almost no time. In the morning you are in one country with its customs and manners; in the evening you can be in another country with different people, different customs, an entirely different scene setting.

H. R. Scott, Republic building, publishing business—I can't help but feel it our duty to see and know America first; but to travel in Europe, with its different peoples and customs, gives an opportunity to learn more about humanity in general by comparison. I put in two years in the army in Europe, and the vast difference of everything within a radius of a few miles is novel to us in the states.

Mrs. S. H. Keve, Metropole hotel—I think I would prefer a tour in Europe. I have read so much about the United States and know its history by heart, even if I haven't seen it all, but since the war I have become interested in Europe. A trip to Europe would give a chance to see where our American soldiers lie. It would also give a chance to compare Europe with what I have seen of America.

Carl J. Easterberg, Winnetka, Ill., sales manager—Since I have only toured the United States, and only a portion at that, I am not qualified to say whether I would be interested in touring Europe or not. I'd like to have the chance not only to cover our own scenes of interest but to see what Europe has to offer also. The willing material is right here; who's going to be the donor?

GOSSIP OF THE AUTO TRADE

THE W. C. Auble Motor company, 2424 Michigan avenue, received notification last week from Carroll Downes, president of the Star Motors corporation, of appointment as distributor of the new Durant Star car in the Illinois territory. The factory head added that heavy demand for the new car, which sells as low as $348 f. o. b. Detroit, will make it impossible for the factory to keep entirely abreast of its orders during the first year. Mr. Auble hopes to have a chassis of the future Detroit development on exhibition soon and to duplicate the New York record when 59,000 people visited the initial Broadway showing.

Glen View Road Open to Public

MAJ. GEORGE A. QUINLAN, county superintendent of highways, yesterday announced the completion and opening of the Glen View road, an important lateral running west from Wilmette to Glen View and connecting with the concrete road west of Glen View to Milwaukee avenue. The new lateral connects all of the concrete highways running north to the county line and will relieve the congestion on Dempster street as well as serving north shore communities and northwest gardens.

The road is one of the first completed under the county maintenance system. It is built of water bound macadam under the new penetration system. To find it, turn left from Sheridan road at Central street in Wilmette, cross the railroad, and follow Wilmette avenue and the Glen View road to Glen View.

WORK-BENCH WISDOM

BY PETER SAMPSON.

MOTORISTS, do you oil your generator bearings regularly? Many car owners oil every other part of the car religiously, but neglect the generator and starting motor bearings, the proper lubrication of which is essential to the proper functioning of the entire electrical equipment.

Two types of bearings are in common use in electrical units—bronze sleeve bearings and ball bearings. Bronze bearings require lubrication every 300 miles. Ball bearings have less friction surface, and require lubrication every 500 miles. Care should be exercised not to use too much oil. Too much is worse than not enough, as the excess may seep into the unit itself, and cause serious damage. Three or four drops in each bearing is usually sufficient.

Many car owners make the mistake of using a very light grade of oil in bearings. An oil with a little body is better. It stays in the bearing longer.

Watch the charging rate of your generator. In warm weather a maximum charging rate of 10 amperes is sufficient to keep the battery fully charged, under average driving conditions. In cold weather, starting is more difficult, lights are used for longer periods, and other conditions make it necessary to increase the maximum charging rate to twelve amperes.

Under special conditions, where there are frequent starts, or unusually long periods when the lights are used, the maximum charging rate should be increased, if practicable. Some generators are designed to withstand a high rate of charge. Others will overheat badly when charging at a high rate, and in time go up in smoke. The object of the car owner should be to diagnose his particular needs, and have the generator adjusted to charge only enough to keep the battery up at all times.

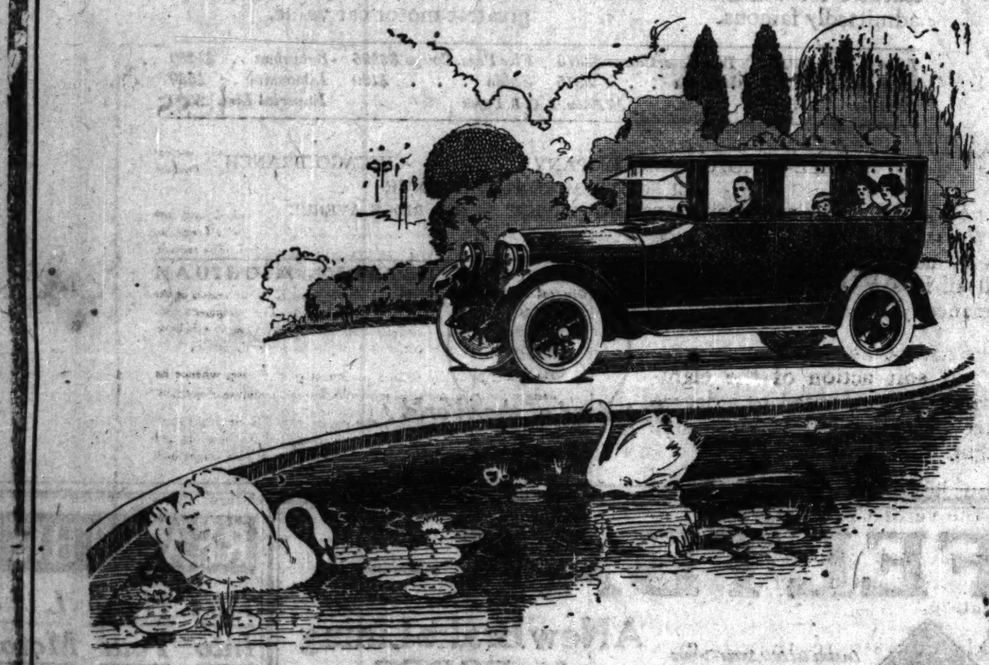
The CHALMERS SIX



Smooth and silent as the swan—

—the Paige Six-66 moves on highways or busy streets. You marvel at the silence of its great power, so evenly and unbrokenly delivered. Marvel until you appreciate the balanced efficiency of the 70 H. P. motor under the hood.

Not a vibration marks the generation of this smooth-flowing power. It gives to the Sedan the same able performance that has established Paige as master of the highway. Exact of the motor all that you could ask of your ideal, and still you sense a wide margin of reserve power.

With every bearing superbly lubricated, the motor is assured a frictionless long life of silent service. And the touch of the frailest hand on the wheel finds instant response from the ball-bearing steering spindles. Gears are shifted without conscious effort; the brake takes hold with an easy pressure from the foot. There's supreme smoothness in the new type clutch.

Step into the Sedan and lean back in the beautiful upholstery, with deep cushions adjusting themselves to your body. You will find your comfort has been jealously guarded. Long wheelbase, long springs, snubbers, Paige-Timken axles, low-hung body, evenly poised weight—continuing comfort on any road.

The Paige Sedan is a favorite with women. They appreciate its ease of handling, the full joy of exertionless riding comfort. Its smart appointments and pleasing proportions never lessen in their appeal. Small wonder that the Paige Six-66 is a leader among fine cars. Please accept this invitation to try its silent smoothness.

FARM and GARDEN by Frank Ridgway

More Beets, More Factories Needed for State's Sugar

INTELLIGENT rotation of crops and the building of more beet sugar factories in the Chicago territory would put sugar beet growing on a very profitable basis in Cook and adjoining counties. This is the opinion of A. Opalla, a former German chemist in European beet sugar factories who has been making a close study of the sugar beet industry for a year and a half in the Chicago district, with the hope of establishing factories and encouraging a more extensive growing of the crop in Illinois.

In a survey and study of the sugar beet industry in Illinois Mr. Opalla believes he has uncovered facts that should be of interest to Illinois farmers and business men in general. He points out the great need for Illinois to produce its own sugar. The state has only one beet sugar factory, which has a capacity of 5,000 tons a year. Cook county, with more than 3,000,000 people, consumes about 135,000 tons annually, valued at $13,500,000, if sold at 5 cents a pound. The average consumption per capita in the United States is ninety pounds a year.

Satisfying the Sweet Tooth.

Meeting the needs of Cook county's sweet tooth would take 1,012,500 tons of sugar beets, according to Mr. Opalla. A ton of beets averages 13½ per cent, or 270 pounds of the best white sugar. It takes seven and a half tons of beets to produce one ton of pure sugar. He says farmers would have to use 67,500 acres of land to grow enough beets to supply sugar to Cook county alone.

But Cook county could not spare that much land, and for that reason Mr. Opalla believes the beet question should interest Illinois farmers wherever this crop can be grown successfully, particularly in the northern part of the state.

Rotation Is Imperative.

Figures on the cost of producing sugar beets range from $57 to $105, or an average of $81 an acre, the yield running from 10 to 20 tons an acre. The high cost is due to the fact that farmers grow beets year after year on the same piece of ground instead of rotating with other crops, says Mr. Opalla.

"The foolish—almost criminal—robbing of the soil is responsible for the loss of $12.95 an acre on sugar beets that sell at $5.50 a ton, said Mr. Opalla in discussing the figures on cost of production and the contract prices offered to farmers in Cook county this year.

"With the proper rotation of crops, the man who grows sugar beets need not spend $30 an acre every year to manure his land," he said. "Manuring each every four years, along with the proper rotation of crops, will be sufficient, because the many millions of roots and rootlets of beets that penetrate the soil loosen and areate it, and after the crop is lifted out of the ground the rootless decay, leaving plant food and humus in the soil."

Profit in Beet Tops.

In figuring production costs the value of tops as feed is often overlooked. According to Mr. Opalla, every acre of beets yields from seven to ten tons of tops, worth either as feed for live stock or plowed under as manure, about $2 a ton. If proper credit is given to the tops that should be plowed under or returned to the soil in the form of manure, and rotation is properly looked after, there is profit to be made in growing beets at $5.50 a ton, according to the investigator's figures.

By using more land to grow beets and by building factories near production centers, Illinois would not only effect a great saving on the transportation to factories in other states and save the freight cost of shipping sugar from the factories—but millions of dollars that are sent outside the state to buy sugar every year could be kept at home.

Dairymen's Jottings

It's a waste of money nowadays for dairy farmers to attempt to build up a herd of pure bred cattle without having every animal tested from time to time. Failing to test has been a common mistake with many dairymen who, after spending a lifetime in building up a fancy herd and neglecting to test, later found the entire herd to be infected with tuberculosis and practically worthless.

John M. Evvard, an authority on feeding at the Iowa station, says that since there will be little incentive to cut down on the grain ration this winter, due to the large crop of relatively low priced corn, it should be a good year for those who have silos. Fill the silo this fall and plan to refill in midwinter.

"A quart of milk and two salads a day will keep the doctor away—and perhaps the dentist, too, if you begin young enough," says the Kansas State Agricultural college.

The ordinary grain binder is now being used by farmers to cut and bind soy beans. They find the binder an easy way to harvest soy beans and a good way to prevent loss.

Illinois' Oldest Breeder.

J. A. Countryman of Rochelle is probably the oldest breeder of pure bred Poland China hogs in Illinois. He established his herd of pure breds in 1872, fifty years ago, and had raised market hogs in large numbers previous to that time. During his half century in the pure bred hog business he has averaged keeping more than fifty brood sows, many of them farrowing two litters a year. Without any element of boastfulness Mr. Countryman says he believes he has raised more hogs than any living man in Illinois.

The New PEERLESS

Power, Speed and Ductility Unparalleled In the Annals of American Motoring

We are assured of the sale of all these new Peerless cars we can produce during the entire current year.

This message to you, therefore, is simply an invitation—an invitation to come in and pass judgment on what we believe you will pronounce a remarkable piece of work notably well done.

It is our hope—and our expectation also—that the verdict of those competent to judge, will be such that all over America tomorrow the name Peerless will take on a new meaning and a deeper significance.

You have been promised great things in the name of Peerless, and after many months, to the very best of our ability, that promise is about to be fulfilled.

We shall be disappointed if you do not say that Peerless has evolved out of the eight-cylinder principle, capacities for enjoyment and ease which eight-cylinder cars have never yet yielded.

But extracting from this principle its uttermost in power, sustained speed, and ductility, we believe we have introduced into the fabrication of motor cars, elements of ease—or at any rate degrees of ease—they have not possessed before.

This process of evolution will, we are convinced, give you a new conception of power and speed by which all cars of the highest grade will be judged from this time forward.

The contrast between abundant power as you have heretofore experienced it, and power as you will encounter it in the Peerless, is so marked that it immediately manifests itself in a most amazing way in the performance of the car.

It has all the natural swift response, manageability, and soft action of the eight-cylinder principle, accelerated to a degree of obedience and ductility that will prove a new delight.

These are our honest convictions—but the proof and the verdict rest with you.

There is in all men who feel that they have done a good piece of work, a craving for appreciation.

We frankly confess to that human weakness.

This car was built for your approval—to win, if possible, first place in the favor of the discriminating motorists of America.

Therefore, we not only ask, but urge, you to come in and see the new Peerless, and if it pleases and inspires you as we hope and believe it will, give us the satisfaction of earning your endorsement.

And when we say you we mean the entire family—not excluding the boys (who are probably the best judges of motor cars in the household) and certainly including mother and the girls, to whom the exquisite design and appointments of the new Peerless will make special appeal.

THE PEERLESS MOTOR CAR CO., CLEVELAND, OHIO

The New Peerless

It is our sincere belief that nothing short of the most costly custom-built creations can compare with the beauty of the new Peerless eight-cylinder motor car.

The body design itself is one of unusual grace and exceptionally fine proportions. The car is longer and lower. The wheels are smaller, the tires larger. The fenders are exceedingly attractive. The radiator and hood present an extremely pleasing aspect.

The degree of riding smoothness is so pronounced, by reason of the longer wheelbase—now 128 inches—and the new equipment with extra-long semi-elliptic springs, that it will induce you, we believe, to say this is the most comfortable car you have ever ridden in

The driver finds himself in a position of greatest ease, whence he steers, shifts gears, starts and stops with the very minimum of exertion.

Perhaps the most notable feature of the new Peerless Eight road-behavior is its smoothness—a lack of chattering and bumping and sideway bound to delight the motorist who has always sought such comfort and always fallen short of finding it.

This new Peerless Eight goes even farther, if that is possible, in those splendid qualities of reliability which enable a car always to respond promptly and efficiently, no matter what it is called upon to do.

The power, the speed, the ductility for which the Peerless eight-cylinder engine has long been famous, are enhanced by carefully worked out engineering improvements. Engine design is cleaner. All parts are easy to get at.

Delco starting, lighting and ignition contribute to the all-around dependability of the car. The storage battery is Exide.

Both axles are Timken, the front with roller-bearings not only on the wheel spindles, but in the steering pivots as well, to increase steering-ease still further; and the rear of the semi floating type, with 15½ x 2½ inch brakes—a size scientifically proportioned to the weight and power of the car.

It is easy to appreciate all we say of riding comfort when it is known that the front springs are 41 inches long and the rear springs 60 inches long. The shackle bolts have the unusually large diameter of ⅝ inch, which means almost no wear at a point ordinarily slighted in engineering.

Open cars carry the Peerless permanent top, equipped with dome light. The side-curtains fit so snugly that they give the practical advantages of a closed car.

In the closed car types, the doors and windows are unusually wide, the hardware reminds you of fine jeweler's plate, and every accessory of comfort is provided.

Maximum strength in the chassis frame is assured by side bars measuring 7½ inches at their greatest depth. Rigid cross-members, and stout tubular cross-members at both ends, obviate the weaving that inevitably results in body squeaks and rattles.

In addition to a complete equipment of tools, the new Peerless is provided with rear-view mirror, windshield cleaner, combination speedometer and clock, a handy lamp of the reel type, and a special Peerless tail lamp which incorporates an automatic electric rear signal.

Dixie Invests in Good Roads for Winter Visitors

$40,000,000 Spent to Pull Southern Traffic from Mud.

BY J. L. JENKINS.

SOUTHERN states, awake at last to the national transportation development which offers millions annually to their revenue, have poured $40,000,000 into the campaign fund against their traditional mud enemy this summer. Highway improvement work is going forward at top speed in every state south of the Mason and Dixon line at present. Additional bond issues for state and county paving projects are meeting with public approval and support and roads formerly impassable in the fall when the heaviest tourist traffic turns southward, are ready to carry their burden better this year than ever before.

In Tennessee, where for years the rainy season has halted the steadily increasing flow of traffic, a total of $883,000 has been spent in the last few months for highway repair and improvement along the main travel routes and the state is set for statewide approval of the $75,000,000 bond issue which will complete a gigantic system of paved highways in less than eight years. At least fifty years will be required to complete ths system under the present financing plan.

"We propose to spend $10,000,000 a year for seven and one-half years to build the 4,000 miles of state highways which are absolutely necessary to the future progress of Tennessee," declares the state Good Roads association which is fathering the popular bond issue. To do so we must supplement our annual highway income by a bond issue. These will be serial bonds payable each year out of revenue derived from motor license fees and gasoline tax.

"The plan contemplates no increase in property or motor vehicle taxes. The gasoline tax will serve as an up to date toll charge, collected only when people actually use the roads. The improved condition of these roads will return this fee many times to the driver in gasoline saving and upkeep economy."

Travel over roads in Tennessee and other southern states has increased more than 500 per cent in the last twelve years, the association points out, and neither the old type highways nor bridges can possibly withstand its pressure. Kept as county charges, the highways constantly drain the property tax revenue.

Engineers engaged in the southern improvements estimate that the pavements already completed have brought about a reduction in transportation costs to the farmer from 26.6 cents for carrying one tone one mile to 9 cents a ton mile. Consolidated schools, attractive community centers and modern churches have followed closely in the wake of the pavement work so far completed.

Alabama, another state which carries the bulk of tourist traffic from north and northwest to south in the fall and winter months, has invested about $5,000,000 in highway improvements this summer and Georgia has added a total of $780,000 for repairs and extensions of its state system. Contracts in other states under way include: Kentucky, $870,000; Louisiana, $932,000; Mississippi, $844,000; North Carolina, $7,780,000, and South Carolina, $1,104,000.

In Florida, touring objective for thousands of northern motors each month in the fall and winter season, construction attention has turned to the widening of pavements whose ten and twelve feet of surfacing have brought about dangerous congestion. The Dixie highway through Broward county is being extended to double its former width and lateral pavements are being laid to serve the farmer and truck grower for their increasing market movements. In Manatee county a new bond issue is building fifty-five miles of new roads to develop farm to market transportation.

Plans for the general improvement of the Dixie between Jacksonville and Miami include widening the highway to sixty-five feet over its entire length and bringing paving surfaces to a standard eighteen foot width. All railroad crossings will be eliminated through construction of underpasses and viaducts. In addition to this grade crossing work, the state highway department plans to make the highway practically an air line between the two points by straightening all curves and putting through a new right of way to save mileage. The old road is being used while the new highway is under construction.

Buick Seven-Passenger Touring—$1435

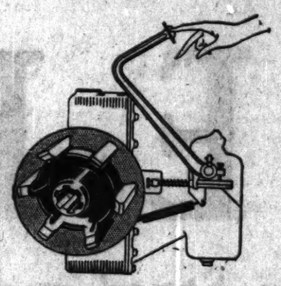
Sweeping refinements in motor, chassis, body and equipment mark the Buick seven-passenger open car for 1923.

Re-designing has brought the car's height down several inches with no sacrifice of head-room—you sit in the automobile, not on it; an entirely new cantilever spring suspension provides a degree of riding comfort, unexcelled.

Take the wheel and you find every driving convenience. Above the windshield is a visor of distinctive design, there is a cowl ventilator, a gasoline gauge on the dash, a rear-view mirror, a tranamission lock, the shifting lever has been extended. The top is bound front and rear with leather and nickeled tips and is lined inside with whip-cord. The entire car shows a completeness of equipment not to be found elsewhere within a thousand dollars of its price.

And back of these improvements stand the traditional qualities of Buick Valve-in-Head power and stability.

The seven-passenger touring is one of fourteen entirely new models at entirely new prices which Buick offers for 1923.



The Famous Buick Clutch

A finger's pressure disengages the Buick clutch yet the clutch is absolutely positive in its action. The clutch in all 1923 models has been still further improved by making the clutch hub a drop forging with ground bearing surfaces, instead of malleable iron.

The Buick Line of 1923 comprises fourteen models: Fours—2 Pass. Roadster, $865; 5 Pass. Touring, $885; 5 Pass. Coupe, $1175; 5 Pass. Sedan, $1295; 6 Pass. Touring Sedan, $1325. Sixes—2 Pass. Roadster, $1175; 5 Pass. Touring, $1195; 5 Pass. Touring Sedan, $1935; 5 Pass. Sedan, $1985; 4 Pass. Coupe, $1895; 7 Pass. Touring, $1435; 7 Pass. Sedan, $2195; Sport Roadster, $1625; Sport Touring, $1675. Prices f. o. b. Flint. Ask about the G.M.A.C. Purchase Plan, which provides for Deferred Payments.

FARM AND GARDEN

Cucumber Culture Brings Big Crop and High Prices

By Frank Ridgway.

ONE-HALF century of successful cucumber growing on the same farm and a fair start on the second fifty years have clearly demonstrated to the Geweke family of truckers that this crop can still be grown at a fair profit in Cook county. While other growers failed year after year and the acreage of Cook county's pickle patch has been cut almost in two, August Geweke has continued to get a fair crop almost every year on his eighty-nine acre truck farm near Morton Grove.

His father, a cooper, started to grow cucumbers more than fifty years ago. He shaved hoop poles and made barrels in the winter and grew cucumbers in the summer, beginning when his son, August, was 9 years ago. Learning the rudiments of trucking under his parents, Mr. Geweke has continually labored to improve their methods of cucumber culture, until today he is considered the most successful and he has been for fifteen years the biggest pickle grower in the county.

Perseverance Brings Reward.

Many commercial cucumber growers have made their entry and exit during those fifty years, some of them growing hundreds of acres. Insects and diseases continued to get worse each season, and more and more growers gave it up, but the Gewekes studied the problems, selected their own seed, kept on hoeing, and almost every season their pickle patch flourished.

Mr. Geweke has twenty-six acres of cucumbers this year. The drought during June gave them a setback all over the county and will probably result in a serious reduction in the yields this season. During the first few days of the early harvesting period, Mr. Geweke, who has been president of the Cook County Truck Garden and Farmer association for twenty years, estimated that the yield of cucumbers in the county will be less than half of last year's crop. However, this will depend largely upon the condition of the weather during August, he says. There are, according to estimates, about 4,000 acres of cucumbers in Cook county this year, the biggest crop in five or six years.

Early Crop Means High Prices.

For fifteen years Mr. Geweke has been using the Chicago market variety of cucumbers, and has selected and saved his seed, only buying seed for experimental purposes. The secret of his success rests largely with the fact that he uses this improved variety of seed and forces the season of the crop so that he begins to harvest two or three weeks before the normal season. The total yield is reduced where the early crop is grown, but this is offset by the high prices that he gets for cucumbers on the early market.

Ordinarily Cook county growers harvest from July 25 to 30. Mr. Geweke begins about the first week in July. This summer he began July 8. The picking season for early cucumbers usually lasts four or five weeks, but those who grow a later crop and strive for maximum production have a season of eight or ten weeks, and sometimes longer.

Fresh Every Day.

In the Geweke patch the pickers begin early in the morning, gathering cucumbers in baskets and transferring them to sacks located at convenient points where a wagon can pick them up in the afternoon. The bags are hauled to the packing shed where the cucumbers are sorted into three grades—the large or salts, four and a half to six inches long; the small ones, two and a half to four and a half inches long, and the culls, including those that are discolored and ill shaped. By 6 o'clock in the evening all the cucumbers are graded, packed in sixty-eight pound bags, and on their way to Chicago. By the time Chicago's kitchen shoppers are out to buy their daily supplies of vegetables the next morning the cucumbers are in the grocer's show window or on the vegetable vender's wagon.

The early crop from the Geweke cucumber patch sold at premium prices. They received $5 for the small ones; $5.50 for the large ones, and from $2.50 to $2.75 for the culls.

The feeding of little or no scratch feed in the morning will help in getting hens to eat mash, say extension experts of Ohio university. This is also aided by having large self feeders accessible to the flock at all times, and when birds get feed around the barn keep them penned the first half of the day.

COOK COUNTY'S BIGGEST PICKLE PATCH.—On this farm the Geweke family has been growing cucumbers successfully for fifty years. August Geweke, shown in the background of the picture, is running the farm. He has twenty-six acres of cucumbers this year, and has produced a profitable crop in spite of the dry weather.

Poultry Tips

Midwest farmers who are interested in improving their flocks would find it worth while to join some of the poultry tours that are being conducted by the extension departments of the various agricultural colleges in the corn belt. Old time methods of handling the farm flock can no longer be followed profitably. The tours give farmers and small town poultry keepers a chance to visit some of the best flocks in the community and to study methods of breeding, incubation, brooding, feeding, housing, and many other subjects that will aid in increasing the layer's profits.

Egg laying contests in Indiana are having much to do with encouraging farmers to buy good cockerels. As a result of contests conducted by Purdue university twenty cockerels from hens that have 200 egg records a year have been brought into Jennings county, according to Floyd W. Potts, county agent.

Developing a private trade and sticking a trade mark on every egg is a good way to get premium prices. The North Haledon Leghorn club in Passaic county, N. J., is sticking a small trade mark on all eggs sold by its members. Poultrymen guarantee eggs sold under the trade mark. Those who produce eggs for private city customers might find the use of the trade mark an effective means of advertising their product and increasing the number of customers.

The University of Nebraska claims this is a good ration for fattening broilers in the summer: Use 100 pounds of ground corn, 50 pounds of ground barley or oats, 30 pounds of shorts, mixed with sour milk or buttermilk. Feed this mixture for ten days, put in each time as much as the fowls will clean up in thirty minutes.

Poultry show fever is a good thing for flock owners to have. Attending the shows and exhibiting at the county, state, and national fairs and expositions in the fall and winter is a good way to become interested in the production of better birds and more eggs. Showing a few of your best birds, whether you win or not, is often worth while.

Crate feeding of broilers at this time of the year is being recommended by some poultry specialists. Keep the crate in a shady place or the chickens will suffer during the extremely hot weather, where they are unable to get exercise.

GARDEN NOTES

If you are a lover of flowers and are planning to make a late summer tour through western states, stop at Glacier National park. That's one place where the flowers of the Pacific coast, the Alaska region, the northern plains, and the Rocky mountain region meet, says the American Forestry Magazine.

Don't forget to save the cull apples and make them into cider. Cider will probably sell at a good price this fall. High quality cider can be made by any farmer or orchardist, whether he has had previous experience or not, if he follows the directions given in farmers' bulletin 1265, which will be sent free to any one who writes to the department of agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Save some of the best plants in your garden for seed. The best kind to save are plants that produced the best vegetables. It only takes a few plants of each kind or variety to furnish enough seed for next season's planting. Most vegetables that go to seed are not fit to eat, and are wasted if not used for the production of seed.

Pre-War Railroad Rates for Dairy Exposition

The National Dairy exposition will be held at St. Paul, Minn., this year from Oct. 4 to 14. The Western Passenger association has granted pre-war railroad rates to the Twin Cities, according to an announcement of Eben E. MacLeod, chairman of the association.

There will be an open rate of one and one-third fares from the northern peninsula of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, east of the Missouri river; Iowa, on the north of the C. & N. W. railway, and from Clinton to the Missouri valley.

Tickets at this rate are to be sold Oct. 5 to 13 inclusive, final return limit Oct. 16. The minimum excursion fare is $1.00, and half fare applies to children, says the announcement.

The fare will be one and a half for the balance of the United States.

The New Delivery Car
—with extra heavy rear axle

THE frame is extra long—supporting the load better and providing more loading space forward of the rear axle than you will find in any other light delivery chassis.
The same famous Triplex Springs used on Overland Passenger Cars give extra comfort and protect fragile loads. All parts are 20% heavier than in commercial cars of similar capacity. Gasoline mileage is very high. But see this car yourself—drive it—and then you will know why so many business men are finding in it the solution to the problem of reducing delivery costs per mile.

SALVATION ARMY GLEN ELLYN FARM TO BE SUBDIVIDED

Evangeline Booth O. K.'s Realty Project.

BY AL CHASE.

Commander Evangeline Booth of New York, head of the Salvation Army forces in the United States, last week put her official O. K. on the removal of the famous old Salvation Army farm home for city youngsters from Glen Ellyn. At the same time she opened the way for the subdividing of the picturesque farm, with its 55 acres of rolling grounds, orchards, vineyards, fine old trees and magnificent sweeping views east, south and west across Du Page county.

EVANGELINE BOOTH. [Ira L. Hill Photo.]

Miss Booth's approval was won by Peter Johansen, of Johansen & Co., north shore real estate dealers, specialists in Winnetka property, particularly around Indian Hill. This marks the entrance of the first north shore firm to operate in Glen Ellyn on a large scale.

Salvation Home to Move.

Johansen & Co. have made arrangements to subdivide the property and at the same time to locate the home on some small body of water in the northern part of the state. The subdivision will be called South Heights and will be the first restricted area in Glen Ellyn since Zander's park was laid out years ago.

"It's so well restricted that it won't have to be zoned," said Village Trustee Jesse L. Wagner, a member of the Glen Ellyn zoning commission.

Houses must cost more than $6,000. No garages or makeshift residences may be built for living purposes. No flats, two family houses, stores or commercial buildings of any sort will be allowed.

Plan Old English "Roads."

There'll be about 200 lots, averaging 50x158, and selling from $550 to $1,000. The wooded ten acres at the north end of the farm, with the present farm buildings, will not be subdivided at present. These will be sold later in estates of from one to three and one-half acres. This section is just south of the H. W. Overman estate, with its attractive lake.

There'll be several new streets cut through and Forest avenue and one or two others will be extended. Wherever possible old English names will be used for the christening of streets, which by the way, will be called "roads," a sensible and growing custom among suburbs on the north shore and long common in eastern suburban towns. Berkeley, Essex, Clarendon, Dover, Nottingham and Plymouth are some of the names under consideration for the roads of South Heights.

Boundary to Be Boulevarded.

The magnificent row of giant elms along the south boundary is to be made the center of a grass plot, with roadways on each side, to be called Elmwood drive, connecting Park boulevard and Main street, which are the east and west boundaries of the subdivision.

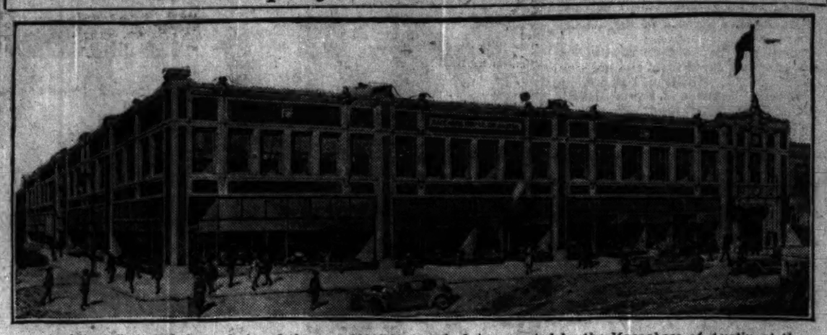
A novelty so far as Glen Ellyn is concerned will be installed in the new subdivision. The four corners at every street intersection will be rounded so that there'll be a sweeping curve from sidewalk to sidewalk, making motor traffic much safer and easier. This already has been done in the loop at certain corners for street cars and is being done by certain progressive communities as fast as possible.

Sales Begin on Labor Day.

George Nelson, village engineer, is surveying and platting the new subdivision. Petitions are to be entered at once for sewer, water, sidewalks, etc. According to F. H. Emmert, sales manager, the selling campaign will begin Labor day.

"It's the kind of property that we could get $4,000 an acre for on the north shore," said Mr. Johansen.

Temple for Austin Maccabees



Architect C. A. Eckstorm designed the new $200,000 temple being erected by the Maccabees of Austin at the southwest corner of Chicago and Waller avenues. Further details are given on this same page.

LANDMARK MAKES WAY FOR $175,000 BUSINESS BLOCK

Old settlers will remember "The Point," the northwest corner of Lincoln avenue and Roscoe street, at the intersection of Paulina, where shortly after the Chicago fire the Hoffman house was built. It was the first stop in and the last stop out for farmers and other travelers along the old Lincoln road. Many a lodge was organized and many a present day grandad celebrated his wedding in its halls.

Work is now under way on a two story recreation and business block on the site of the Hoffman house designed by Architect R. G. Wolff for Jacob Wolf, head of the Wolf Furniture company. Above the nine stores on the ground floor will be an entire floor devoted to recreation, with a billiard hall, fourteen bowling alleys with an amphitheater seating 200, etc. It will cost $175,000 and be completed about Nov. 1.

UNDERTAKER TO BUILD $420,000 FOX TROT PALACE

J. P. Marzano, an undertaker at 931 West Polk street, believes variety is the punch in business life, so he has had plans drawn by Architects Alexander Levy and William J. Klein for a $420,000 establishment for the expression of terpsichorean enthusiasm at 5600 West Madison street, in Austin.

This is the northwest corner of Central avenue. The building permit has been taken out and work will start in two weeks, says Mr. Klein. There will be seven stores, space on the second floor for a cafeteria or billiard room, and in the rear one of the largest dance halls in the city, to accommodate 3,500 fox trotters at one time. The entire building will be 150x140. The saxophones will moan Christmas eve.

SHERIDAN HIGHLANDS SUBDIVISION TO BE OPPOSITE RAVINIA

Sheridan Highlands will be the name of the newest exclusive north shore subdivision. It will be opened within a few days by McCormack, Black & Co. on Sheridan road close to Ravinia park.

They have bought from George L. Schein of Schein & Beckwith, attorneys, what is commonly known as the Walker property, a eleven and one-half acre tract at the turn in Sheridan road directly opposite the eastern entrance to Ravinia. Sheridan road bounds it on the south and west. Perry Ulrich and Otto B. Von Linde were the brokers representing Mr. Schein.

McCormack, Black & Co. will subdivide their property into lots 100x150 and cut a private north and south street through Sheridan Highlands. Residences must cost more than $10,000. The new subdivision is in Highland Park and is nearest the Ravinia station of the Northwestern.

PLAN A $150,000 BACHELOR HOTEL ON CORNELIA AVE.

And still more bachelor quarters. Architect Arthur M. Heda is drawing plans for a four story structure on the south side of Cornelia avenue, facing Wilton, to cost with the furnishings $150,000 and to be called the Cornewill annex. It'll be 54x140 and contain two shops and sixty-six rooms, all with showers. March 1 is set as opening date.

In this instance the owners, Henry Maier and I. Maier are building the annex before they start the main structure. Later on they will build the Cornewill hotel, across the street on the northwest corner, 75x100, with eighty rooms.

Architect Heda also is drawing plans for a three story store, office, and flat building at 3957 Fullerton avenue, 54x60, for Solomon Brooks, to cost $50,000.

MACCABEES OF AUSTIN START $200,000 TEMPLE

Work started during the week on the $200,000 Maccabee Temple of Austin, at the southwest corner of Chicago and Waller avenues, on a 120x125 site. The two story brick and terra cotta building, designed by C. A. Eckstrom, will have eight stores and upstairs twelve doctors' and dentists' offices, in addition to two lodge halls, kitchen, lounge, check rooms, lobbies, rest rooms, library, etc., for the Maccabees. The larger of the two auditoriums will contain a balcony and the entire building will be equipped with a ventilating and cooling system. Phillips & Co. have underwritten a $110,000 bond issue.

Woman Broker Makes Sale on Diminutive Highway

Ever hear of London avenue? Neither did we until Miss Helen Palmer of James Tinley's office told us of a sale she made at the southeast corner of that thoroughfare and Lawrence. Judging from the map, it's one of the shortest highways in Chicago, despite its imposing name. It's just west of Milwaukee avenue and curves its diminutive way one short block, connecting Lawrence avenue and Giddings street. Miss Palmer sold the London block, 126x60, stores, flats, and offices, for James Vinograde, to Attorney Julius Lorenz, for a reported $80,000, subject to $62,000.

Broadway Garages Sold; $150,000 Is Paid for One

Will F. Hodgson paid an indicated $150,000 to the Christopher Motor Sales company for the garage, 100x235, at 5045 Broadway. Another Broadway garage, 100x125, at No. 5650, was sold by Dimitreos Limberopulos to Lewis T. M. Slocum for an indicated $70,000, subject to $40,000. I. J. Geer was attorney.

GOING TO BUY A HOME? HERE'S A TIP IF YOU ARE

See That Your Property Is Held in Trust:

Are you buying a home? If you are, is the property you are making payments on held in trust by some responsible trust company? Or, if you're only negotiating with some subdivision concern for a lot, have you asked them if the property they're trying to sell you is held in trust?

H. W. ELMORE. [Moffett Photo.]

This is a point that's mighty important and the fact that it's not universally insisted on by the home buyers is disclosed in the number of subdividers operating without protecting their customers in this manner.

Not Always a Criterion.

Of course, every subdivider that puts his property in trust isn't a monument of integrity. There's one subdivision company doing a fair sized business, which has anything but an enviable reputation in the realty world, but which points with much pride to the fact that its property is held in trust. It doesn't call attention to the fact that it was turned down by practically every mortgage banker and trust company in town before it found a small loop bank to act as trustee.

We mention this to emphasize the importance of the prospective buyer seeing that the trustee is a responsible banking house.

Urges Protection.

H. W. Elmore, head of H. W. Elmore & Co., subdividers, yesterday commented on the question of property being held in trust. He declared that there is nothing more valuable than the protection of the contract holder.

"I believe that all subdivision properties and others as well, either for home, investment, or subdivision lots, if arrangements can be made, should be put in trust for the protection of the contract holder, so that when the contract is paid in full the buyer will have no difficulty in getting the deed," he said.

"There are two ways. First, if a property has no mortgage on it a responsible trust company should take title to the subdivision or real estate. A trust company won't take title to property under a trust agreement as trustee if it has a mortgage on it.

Trust Company Responsible.

"For example, if a contract is issued for a subdivision lot with a responsible trust company as trustee of the property, calling for restrictions and improvements, the trust company will be responsible for the carrying out of these improvements and the enforcement of these restrictions. A trust company never dies; an individual will.

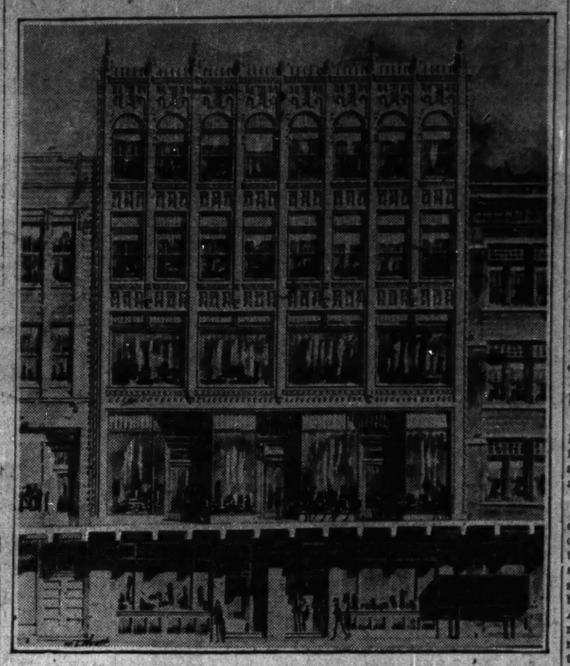
"The individual also may have trouble with mechanics' liens; he may mortgage the property after being sold; his wife may refuse to sign deeds; he may become mentally incompetent. In any case, he couldn't give a clear title to the property after the contract was paid in full. In the last two instances it would be beyond his control. If a trust company is trustee of property when the contract is paid in full any two officers of the trust company may sign the deed.

Syndicate Also Used.

"The second way is by forming a syndicate, one of which may be selected as trustee through a trust agreement. This is used mostly in building, where there may be a mortgage, as a trust company doesn't care to hold property in that case. But the trustee may have the power to mortgage the property, sign notes, etc., and, in the event of his death, the majority of the members of the syndicate may select another trustee.

"I feel that there is nothing more valuable than the protection of the contract holder. In ninety-five cases out of a hundred they work very hard for their money where real estate is bought on a contract. I feel that this man should have all the protection that can possibly be given him, as he has no money for hiring lawyers to help clear up his title."

Upper Boul Mich Improvement



The entire building at 314-18 upper Michigan avenue is to be remodeled from plans by Architects Loewenberg & Loewenberg for the owners, Mrs. Mary Howe Straus and Mrs. Caroline Howe Packard. It will be four stories, with two store entrances on the lower boulevard level, as shown in the above picture. Hefter & Wells are the agents in charge of the renting, but they've failed to tell when the building will be ready to rent.

$200,000 Frontier Avenue Flats to Be Ready Oct. 1

Oct. 1 is the date of completion set for the $200,000 nine apartment building designed by John A. Nyden, now under construction at 3932-40 Frontier avenue, the tiny thoroughfare running south from Irving Park boulevard at the lake. There will be six rooms and three baths in each apartment, with the rental at $300 per month. J. H. McCortney & Co. have made a $90,000 loan. Harold Bradley & Co. are renting agents.

Here's the latest bulletin from J. Soule Warterfield, business manager of the Chicago Real Estate board, on the coming annual realtors' outing at Grand Beach, Mich., on Sept. 12: Charles Ringer announces a silver cup for the winner of the quoits contest, to be held permanently. Abraham Lincoln Green announces he will give a silver cup to the best wielder of a tennis racquet. This trophy also will be a permanent holding of the winner. It seems the old custom of soliciting prizes from loop firms to be used for contest prizes is gradually being done away with. It's about time. A wealthy, powerful organization like the Chicago Real Estate board should pay cash for all its prizes.

William O. Grafe announces that he has taken over all the interests of the firm of Grafe & Worthington, formerly at 3625 Broadway, who recently opened a larger office at 3561 Broadway.

Charles M. Nichols has issued another invitation to the men and women of Chicago to attend the exhibition of tentative plans, drawn by the technical staff of the Chicago zoning commission, now at the Chicago Real Estate board rooms, 67 West Monroe street. At 10 a. m. tomorrow residents on the north side living south of North avenue are urged to come and hear what the zoning experts have decided is best for their property. At 2 p. m. those north of North avenue are invited. On Tuesday the northwest side, east of Western avenue, will be shown at 10 a. m., and at 2 o'clock the territory covered will be Western avenue to the limits.

On Wednesday morning maps of the west side east of Western avenue will be shown and explained. In the afternoon the territory west of Western to the limits.

All of the southwest side will be shown on Thursday at 10 a. m. Southsiders are asked to attend in the afternoon, two sessions being planned; those living north of 55th at 2 p. m., and those south of 55th at 4 p. m.

Tailor Buys Two Blocks of South Side Vacant; $17,500

Nicholas Stern, tailor, has bought from the Chicago Title and Trust company, for a reported $17,500, the ten acres of vacant in the two blocks bounded by Stony Island, 91st street, McFarland, and 91st place, containing about 2,300 feet of street frontage. Chauncy G. Smith of Perry Ulrich's office was broker.

TO BUILD ON BROADWAY.

Morris J. Bender has bought the 40 foot lot at 4025 Broadway from William J. Beewar, through Baird & Warner, for a reported $20,000, and it is understood will improve shortly with a business building.

Perfect Heaters

Just One of Many R & B Products

Gas and dust proof. Women enjoy a home with a Perfect Heater because it makes it easier to keep house.

Economical of fuel. Especially designed to get combustion practically perfect—and the smoke travel of 8 to 12 feet forces gases to give up their heat before reaching the chimney.

A heavily corrugated fire-pot and flanges increase the radiation surface nearly 3½ times over the ordinary furnace. A combustion dome which conforms to the shape of the flame heats a large volume of air more efficiently.

Air is moistened—and outside jacket keeps heat inside of heating system. Burns any kind or grade of hard or soft coal.

How a Trade Association Benefits the Public

You will find in every line of business certain men who realize that the customer's interests come first, and that permanent goodwill is the best basis for business success.

These men are naturally interested in constant betterment of the general standard of business ethics, and thus you find them associated in trade or professional groups for this specific purpose. We have Bank Clearing Houses, Stock Exchanges, Boards of Trade, Medical Societies, Chambers of Commerce, Institutes of Architects—and the Chicago Retail Lumber Dealers Association.

These do not eliminate individual initiative, but they do produce economies due to standardized methods, and they establish and enforce the practice of high standards of business principles and business ethics which compel honesty and fairness to all and which are of distinct benefit to the public.

Thus, the Chicago Retail Lumber Dealers Association guarantees Standard Grades, Standard Quality, Full Measure and Complete Satisfaction with the lumber sold by its members.

The owner, the architect, the contractor, the builder, all can know what to expect when they use lumber bought under the CRLDA trademark.

The policy adopted by this Association of Standardizing Grades, Guaranteeing Quality and Full Measure and Trademarking the lumber sold by its members, is in complete accord with the views expressed by Secretary Hoover of the U. S. Department of Commerce.

This Association has inaugurated this policy to further Secretary Hoover's recommendations and to protect all users of lumber. It means better merchandising of lumber and directly benefits the consumer.

CAUTION SHOWN IN GRAIN MARKET, PRICES HOLDING

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Grain prices held within comparatively narrow limits with a majority of the local element disposed to go slow on either side pending new developments in the general situation. Prices averaged slightly higher. Wheat closed unchanged to ¾c lower, corn unchanged to ¼c higher, oats ⅛@⅜c higher, and rye ½c lower. Lard was 5c higher to 2½c lower and ribs off 5c.

Wheat sold at a new low for the season last week but rallied very sharply later on general short coverings and a good class of commission house buying and at the last net gains were 2@2¼c. Crop damage was the main influence in the corn market and with a letup in pressure prices were up 1⅜@1⅝c for the week while oats were ⅛@1¼c higher, and rye up ¼@¾c. Provisions were unsettled with lard off 2½@10c and ribs 5c at the end.

Wheat Values Hold.

An advance of ¾@1¼d in wheat in Liverpool was responsible for fair buying here early. Houses with seaboard connections took the December on the setback even though the foreign demand was reported as slow. On the advances pressure increased and values held within a range of about 1c. Local sentiment is decidedly mixed and some of the pit traders sold early on the lack of outside interest making the decline to the low point.

Foreign situation showed little change and the trade paid no attention to estimates that the Spanish wheat crop this year was around 125,000,000 bu or 18,000,000 bu less than in 1921. Country offerings are not large with the car shortage restricting the movement in the American northwest. Premiums at Winnipeg were slightly firmer but in Minneapolis markets were practically unchanged. A reduction of 27,000,000 bu in the estimated Kansas corn crop with a letup in the closing of spreads between that grain and wheat made for a slightly higher market. Sentiment, however, was more two sided and prices fluctuated rather rapidly within a range of about 4c. Some rains were reported in parts of Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas, but had little effect. Country offerings fair.

Oats Average Higher.

Oats had a range of ⅝@½c with the action of corn the dominating influence, the average being slightly higher. Exporters are after heavy weight grain, but find offerings small.

Rye showed a rather firm undertone with a cash house a fair buyer of September. Northwestern hedging pressure light. The two markets there received 31 cars.

A break of 1s 9d in Liverpool lard led to rather free commission house and local selling here early making a sharp break. Leading packers absorbed the offerings on the decline and made a good rally. Packing at Chicago for the season to date aggregate 3,116,000 hogs, against 1,191,000 last year. Prices follow:

Lard.	Close Ag.25	Ag.25	Ag.27
Sept.	10.35	10.40	10.37	11.32
Oct	10.47	10.35	10.47	10.42	11.37
Jan	8.95	8.95	8.95	8.97	9.80
	Short Ribs.
Sept			9.67	9.75	9.20

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

A great many of the local professionals were bullish on wheat and several of the leading commission houses bearish. The latter base opinion on the weakness in Winnipeg and the prospective increase in the movement of American and Canadian spring wheat, which they believe hold the keynote to the situation and eventually will carry prices down. Durum wheat for December is 88c in Duluth and is an important factor in governing wheat prices. A number of traders who have been bearish are favorable to the buying side on breaks for improvement in the industrial situation, but unfortunately the latter is not increasing speculative buying to any extent.

Indications are for a decrease in wheat stocks at Chicago and a small increase in the visible supply for the week. Corn shipments here, which have been running larger than the receipts, were reversed last week with the receipts 1,100,000 bu more than the shipments. A small gain is expected in oat stocks here and in the visible.

A corn specialist says that local traders are mostly long and that the outside buying in the west is not sufficient to carry prices higher. He believes that there must be more support from the outside to carry values much farther. Should those who favor the constructive side of the market be right corn values are likely to advance irrespective of the position of the local element.

"The present indications are for a corn crop of around 2,900,000,000 bu," says Ickhertz & Watson of St. Louis. "Most of the bears are to be found in the camp of the country trader. The largest professionals have covered their short lines and the technical position of the market is not so good. The rail strike is delaying the movement of all grains and receipts are barely adequate for requirements. There has been a moderate amount of new export business in wheat, but nothing of an urgent character. Exporters the country over feel that European conditions do not admit of enlarged sales. There have been one or two failures of German and Danish grain firms."

United Kingdom wheat handlers are cautious buyers, according to Broomhall, owing to the unsettled political conditions and the uncertainty regarding the final outcome on the continent. Milling trade is poor and the demand from this source appears very limited.

A decline in rye prices has brought an improved domestic demand for rye flour and local and outside millers have received more orders for rye flour than for a long time past. Foreign born people here are using more rye because it is cheaper. Trade in wheat flour has also improved of late and the mills are doing more business both for immediate and future shipment. They are also good buyers of wheat here and in all markets.

Weekly weather forecast suggested generally fair, with moderate temperatures, although there is a probability of showers the latter part of the week.

Primary receipts of wheat for the season to date aggregate 91,554,000 bu, compared with 122,471,000 bu last year. Corn receipts since May 1 are 317,404,000 bu, against 235,491,000 bu last season. Oats since Aug. 1 are 22,767,000 bu, against 38,330,000 bu last year.

A bearish view of the corn situation is taken by A. T. Martin of Bartlett Frazier Co. He considers the market as in a weak position and believes that the cool weather has dampened the ardor of the bulls. Action of the market, he says, would indicate a considerable reduction in the buying power.

C. C. Parkhurst, for a number of years with A. J. White & Co., has formed a connection with Lamson Bros. & Co.

NEWS OF THE CROPS

Kansas corn crop is estimated at 100,000,000 bu, compared with the government August estimate of 127,000,000 bu, as shown by the Kansas state report wired by C. A. King & Co. of Toledo. Condition is 66.3, against 89.2 in July. Secretary Mohler says the state will do well to raise 100,000,000 bu. Last year's final return was 102,000,000 bu. It is estimated that 30 per cent of the wheat crop has been threshed and 30 per cent marketed. Last year 77 per cent was thrashed and 50 per cent marketed.

F. F. Thompson, the J. E. Bennett & Co. crop expert, in a report from Gibson City, Ill., said condition of corn from Decatur north to Bloomington was excellent. Fifty per cent of the crop made. Balance needs two to three weeks to be out of the way of frost.

"From Redfield south corn improved, though effect of drought is apparent," wired George M. Le Count to Stein, Alstrin & Co. from Mitchell, S. D. "State has suffered severe loss from bumper prospects of a month ago. From Huron here lots of splendid corn. Considerable old corn held on farms and I do not consider South Dakota corn situation alarming."

Burton Hungerford wired Logan & Bryan from Beatrice, Neb.: "From Omaha to Lincoln and here at least 75 per cent of the corn fields south of the Platte river badly fired. Ear development varies from early milk stage to well developed dough kernels, with many blanks. Estimate damage done this territory will average 40 per cent. Many cutting for feed."

Harvesting is progressing in France and first threshing returns show yields satisfactory, but below those of last year. Increased export tax on corn from Roumania has placed the price on a prohibitive level, so that exports are decreasing rapidly. United Kingdom forecast is for unsettled weather. Crops are showing some deterioration. Clear and cold weather wanted in Argentine.

FINANCIAL NOTES

The opinion prevails in some quarters of the financial district that the country is heading for another period of inflation as a result of the failure of coal operators to reduce wages from the wartime peak level and the advances announced in the steel, textile, and other trades for the purpose of preventing a migration of labor to other industries where the wage scale is more attractive. This situation will lead to nothing else than higher costs and a return of the vicious times of higher prices. If such a development materializes, the prediction is made that the return of a period of inflation would be of short duration and may probably last not more than a year. The reaction which will follow will be more severe than that witnessed last year.

Utilizing logic, Wall street reasons that the railway equipment companies should have prosperous months before them. Yesterday it was pointed out that between the last week in June and the first week in August orders for about 300 locomotives were placed with builders in this country, all but about thirty being domestic business.

The fact that there will be a coal shortage this fall is pretty well fixed in the minds of the executives of most corporations. The only problem left to be solved is just how serious it will become, and whether soft coal and importations will stave off an absolute closedown. In a number of cases corporation executives are considering the advisability of turning from coal burners to fuel oil burners. The change involves considerable expense in boiler reconstruction.

Although labor was more thoroughly liquidated in the steel industry than in any other important line of endeavor during the year 1921, figures appeared in the financial district today which showed that the labor cost per ton of finished steel in that year was the highest in the history of the trade. The figures are based upon the output of the United States Steel corporation, and show that that company paid out an average of $42.85 for labor for each ton of finished steel produced in that year. This compared with $40.80 a ton in 1920, $39.95 a ton in 1919, $32.64 a ton in 1918, and $16.74 a ton in 1913. The increased cost per ton no doubt was due to curtailed operations in the industry as a result of slackened demand.

Plans for reorganization of the International and Great Northern railroad in Texas, by creation of a new corporation known as the International Great Northern company, were presented to the interstate commerce commission yesterday for approval. The new company proposes to acquire all of the property of the railroad by the issuance of $44,500,000 in stocks and bonds. In addition it is proposed to take over the properties of Austin Dam and Suburban railroad and $500,000 in the par value capital stock of the Galveston, Houston and Henderson railroad.

The Chicago Federal Reserve bank reports the weekly movement of credits as follows: Debits to individual deposit account reported for the week ending Aug. 23 by 200 banks in twenty-four leading clearing house cities in the seventh federal reserve district, aggregate $859,407,000, compared with $927,573,000 a week ago. Aggregate debits to individual deposit account amounted to $859,407,000, compared with $844,861,000 for the corresponding week last year.

The new Ashland-Sixty-third State bank, organized with a capital of $200,000 and surplus of $20,000, is expected to open for business about Oct. 1. Ernest A. Curtis is president, and Herman Daum Sr. and William F. Campbell vice presidents. Temporary quarters of the bank will be at 6346 South Ashland avenue.

An Unusually Safe Bond Issue

THE direct obligation of E. Edelmann & Co., and secured by a closed First Mortgage on the above property — this bond issue embodies the features of safety essential to careful investors whose funds require absolute security.

The conservative estimated value of the property is $175,000.00. As a further safeguard the company has deposited with the Union Bank of Chicago $22,000.00 face value of approved securities to be held as collateral on this bond issue until it is reduced to $90,000.00.

The Company's building is so designed that it could be used by many other kinds of business now operating in this locality. Based on a nominal rental value of sixty cents per square foot, an income of more than $36,000.00 could be obtained, which is almost four times the largest annual interest payment on these bonds.

E. Edelmann & Co. presented an excellent financial statement as of June 1, 1922. During the past five years the volume of sales averaged approximately one million dollars per year. Yearly earnings during the same period averaged more than twelve times the largest amount of interest on this bond issue.

We recommend and will be pleased to send full particulars regarding these bonds.

An oversupply of "big heavy" hogs on the packing order cut Saturday's general average price to $7.85, the lowest since January, against $8.10 a week ago and $8.25 a year ago. Prices ruled steady to 10c lower than Friday, with best light at $9.65.

Receipts of hogs totaled 126,500 for the week being unusually large for this season of the year, 15,000 larger than a year ago, and 19,400 above the ten year average. Estimated average weight last week, 257 lbs., equaling heaviest average in nearly ten years, 4 lbs heavier than a year ago and 14 lbs above the ten year average.

While choicest beef steers held steady during the week, other kinds, including butcher stock declined 15@50c, with some fair to good; yearlings, off more. Heavy steers topped the week at $10.95 and fancy yearlings at $10.85. Native beef steers averaged 30c lower at $9.50.

Lambs Close Strong.

About 2,000 sheep and lambs yesterday were mostly "directs" to packers. Local trade closed strong and generally 25@35c above late previous week, with best westerns quotable at $13.15. Feeder demand was slow and best moved at $12.50@12.75.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 19,000 cattle, 35,000 hogs and 20,000 sheep, against 14,130 cattle, 21,334 hogs and 40,487 sheep corresponding day a year ago. The New York Times.

New York, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—The dispiriting overnight dispatches regarding the German situation and our own government's attitude in the coal and railroad controversy were received with equanimity by today's markets.

On the stock exchange the day's movement of prices was narrow and, as a whole, pretty evenly divided between advances and declines.

As a rule, railway shares sold down fractionally. Comparison of the week's closing prices with those of a week ago showed that the market as a whole had gained ground substantially. In the bond market also, the week's result was a general rise in prices. In the foreign exchange rates, which had been falling during the week, there was a slight recovery, even the German mark regaining a considerable fraction of the week's decline.

Federal Seizures Not Expected.

It was recognized today that there are new possibilities of a disturbing sort in the administration's attitude regarding possible seizure of the hard coal mines or individual railways. It is difficult, however, to accept this intimation at the moment as anything more than warning as to the consequence of absolute failure to resume production on anthracite or to distribute the coal that is mined.

"If the hard coal dispute is brought to a speedy end, there will evidently be no government operation. If the embargo on output were to continue indefinitely, exercise of government authority in some form would probably be inevitable. The railways have professed themselves able to handle the necessary traffic, notwithstanding the shopmen's strike. If they do this, we shall hear no more of "government seizure."

German Situation Bewildering.

The German crisis has brought the financial mind into more bewilderment than the home labor complications, because of the difficulty of discovering any way out of the dilemma.

The decline of the mark to one twentieth of a cent is not in itself any matter for great surprise, in view of Germany's currency situation; but the most experienced bankers find it hard to imagine what is to stop the endless chain of depreciation, as the last opportunity for applying each of a series of possible financial expedients seems to be reached and passed. The only certainty, as the bankers see it, is that the whole question of German relations will of necessity have to be taken up again by an international council.

New York Loans Decrease.

Falling off in new demands for credit, possibly a result of coal shortage is reflected in this week's statement of the New York clearing house banks. Loans and discounts decreased $37,670,000. Demand deposits were less by $29,789,000, while time deposits decreased $15,533,000. A shrinkage of $41,584,200 in excess reserve left that item at $7,036,360. Details of the statement, with comparisons, follow:

	Aug. 26.	Aug. 19.

DRY GOODS AND GARMENT NEWS

(COPYRIGHT 1922 BY FAIRCHILD NEWS SERVICE)

NEW YORK—Two New England mills not affected by the textile strike announce wage increases. The Frank Wood Manufacturing company, Valley Falls, R. I., which did not cut pay last January, is raising wages five per cent on Sept. 1. Smith & Dove Manufacturing company, Andover, Mass., is to restore its old wage scale.

BERLIN—Depreciation of the mark, creating a desire by the public to get rid of marks as fast as possible, is leading to merry clothing business at retail. Berlin public now appears better dressed than the public in other European capitals.

NEW YORK—The demand for satin weaves in the broad silk trade, while small this week, emanated from some of the best dress houses in the market. The expected boom of charmeuse so far has failed to develop.

PHILADELPHIA—Knit goods sellers say that large quantities of infants' hosiery have been sold for delivery next year at prices which begin to look extremely low on the basis of present yarn values.

NEW YORK—The women's underwear trade shows a keen interest in several novelties in preparation for spring of cotton goods converters. Checked, dotted, and striped patterns are favorites so far.

LONDON—Both woolen and cotton goods manufacturers in England are looking for a greater demand this year than ever before from the United States. The tariff obstacle is being considered very lightly now.

BERLIN—The big German jute trust, newly organized, is rabidly extending its influences throughout the industry. Five of the largest enterprises are about to unite; it is reliably reported.

NEW YORK—Retail centers the country over continues to report steady consumer buying of house dresses. Retail reductions on white dresses, apparently, have undergone a radical revision downward.

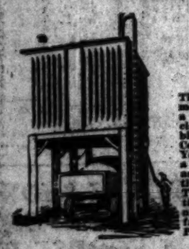
Steel Bins!!

For Sand, Gravel, Coal, Cinders, Etc.

$595



The steel bins we illustrate herewith measure 10 ft. x 12 ft. x 15 ft. and have a capacity of 70 cubic yards. Truck clearance is 10 ft. as illustrated. These bins are particularly adapted for Road Contractors, Material Yards and Coal Yards. The photograph indicates what a great time and labor saver they are, as trucks can be loaded in a very short time and eliminate double handling. Their portability is an added feature, as they are all bolted together in the field, no hot rivets being required. They are far superior to wood which soon decays. Price F. O. B., Chicago, $595.

Structural Steel!

We have large quantities of plates, ¼ inch and heavier, also round bars in all sizes. We can make you quick deliveries.

We have 7,000 Diamond Checkered Floor Plates, measuring 3-16 inch by 2 ft. x 4 ft., which we are quoting at a special price of $2 per plate.

We have a full stock of I beams from 3 inch to 24 inch; angles from 2 x 2 to 6 x 6; channels from 3 inch to 15 inch, which we will cut to length and deliver to site in the City of Chicago or surrounding territory.

English Scientist Causes New Sensation

Deluge of Applications Follows His Latest Offer Which is to Beautify Any Skin in Forty Minutes or Accept No Payment for His Services

WHAT woman has not read of McGowan's clay discovery, and how it has solved for all time every complexion problem? A new skin in forty minutes! Perfect texture, full natural color restored in less than an hour! It all seems too good to be true, but here is your chance to prove it for yourself; read his offer of free proof.

If any woman goes another week without a perfect complexion it will be her own fault!

Here is this young scientist's answer to the scores who have sought an interview at his offices, and to the deluge of questions pouring in by mail—"Will terradermalax work on my skin?"—Do you guarantee results?" etc. The laboratory in Chicago where this remarkable clay is compounded has issued this invitation:

Don't call, or write questions, but merely make known your wish to make your own test of terradermalax. A full-sized jar will be forwarded at once. The trial will carry no obligation. You will not be urged to buy it. If amazed with the new, satiny texture of your skin, and the full and lasting natural color—from just one application—the generous jar is yours to keep for only the bare cost of compounding and placing in your hands. If you are not delighted with results, the trial will not cost you anything.

Such an offer is, of course, nothing more or less than an out-and-out guarantee to make any human skin beautiful. Surely this riskless opportunity to experience the benefits of genuine English complexion clay is worth the momentary effort of filling-out and sending-in the convenient coupon provided on this page.

M. J. McGOWAN, WHOSE DISCOVERY OF ONLY LAST WINTER HAS ALREADY CAUSED QUARTER OF A MILLION WOMEN TO BE GRATEFUL FOR NEW, NATURAL COMPLEXIONS. HIS METHOD OF LAXATING THE SKIN IS RAPIDLY SUPPLANTING LESS SCIENTIFIC EFFORTS TO BANISH BLEMISHES

Your Skin Made Beautiful or You Don't Pay a Penny!

Nothing but the actual application of Terra-derma-lax can reveal its peculiar powers, so I have decided to let you make your own dressing-table test, and see for yourself the big changes brought about before you agree to pay one cent for the service.

Let me have your name and address, and my laboratory will forward this big jar of freshly-compounded Terra-derma-lax by return mail. Promise to use it just once! Unless it brings a really beautiful skin-texture — enamel-smooth and colorful—don't keep it.

Beauty While You Wait

Terra-derma-lax is an English clay, of potent power. Its action is almost instantaneous. Spread it—and forget it. Inside of ten minutes you fairly feel the purging, purifying action in every pore. It is not a mere surface-stimulant; the new color lasts. So, take five days to convince yourself beyond doubt. This offer is my answer to those who have asked if science really can restore the brightness and bloom of youth.

This is a free test. I ask as evidence of good faith only the deposit of $1.95 and postage which the mailman will accept when he delivers the jar. This is to be regarded as a deposit—nothing else. Every penny of this small sum will be returned you if you are willing to part with the full, five-dollar jar sent you. If you keep it, this first jar becomes your property without any further payment. Just use coupon below.

FREE $5 JAR TRIAL

Dermatological Laboratories, 329 Plymouth Place, Chicago

Please send full sized jar of Terra-derma-lax for five day FREE trial. I will deposit $1.95 (plus postage) with the postman, as payment in full for the clay in case I decide to keep it. If the trial does not delight me with results, my full deposit to be returned. [180]

ENGRAVING THE LORD'S PRAYER ON A PINHEAD was the feat accomplished by Charles H. Baker of Spokane, who later became blind and is now in an insane asylum. The picture shows his work magnified more than 1,000 times. It is owned by Charles J. Seymour. Mr. Baker labored at his task far out in the suburbs, where there was a minimum of vibration, and his engraving tools were needles with points that measured one twenty-thousandth part of an inch. A microscope, of course, was necessary.

CECEIL EVANS appears in Mack Sennett comedies. Pirate boots and a curl in the middle of her forehead are some combination, we'll say. Also look at the lady murderess knife clenched in her right hand. Br-rr-rrr! Mae Tinee.

THE MAGNIFICENT PHILANTHROPIST

he caught his hand and cried shrilly above the roar of the traffic, "Say, officer, will you come wid me a second? I wants a witness."

As the perplexed cop strode after him he explained: "A gent lost his mind and give me two hunderd dollars, and I wants your affy davy dat it's all O. K., so dey won't think I pinched it." These words produced an electrical change on the policeman's face—a startled comprehension. He hastened his pace.

"What did the man look like?" he asked.

"He was a young guy; gray suit and straw hat; dere he is now."

Darting ahead to where Jerry was waiting for a street car, he seized his hand and called to the hurrying policeman, "This is him!"

Jerry turned and saw the law approaching. His heart lost a beat, and something in the pit of his stomach seemed to turn a somersault. His face was all guilt and terror. He would pay the penalty at last, he thought, for that affair of a year ago; or perhaps they were after him for passing counterfeit or stolen money. He could prove his innocence there, but in the meantime they would drag up his past. . . . But what was the ragged boy saying? ". . . afraid dey'd say I pinched it, so I brought a cop along so you could tell him dat you give it to me straight."

Jerry breathed easier; he was greatly relieved; his bearing became almost jaunty before the officer's scrutiny: "What the boy says is true; I gave it to him."

But at one glance the policeman's eye had taken in his gray suit and straw hat, brown hair and blue eyes. "What's your name?" he asked suddenly. Jerry was unprepared for this. It flashed through his guilty consciousness that if he gave his correct name, he might be arrested on that old charge. He seized upon the first name that popped into his mind, not realizing where he had heard it. "Carnegie's my name, James Carnegie. I just came in on the train; came to the city on, uh—business."

His questioner's expression changed to one of amazed satisfaction. He put his hand heavily on the bridegroom's shoulder: "Just so, just so; but I'll have to ask you to take a little walk with me."

"But I can't!" in alarm. "I've an awfully important engagement at the Pennsylvania station. I'm late for it already." But the officer's grip on his arm did not relax, and he began to guide him, with scant ceremony, through the crowd that had already collected. To the newsboy he said, "You come along, too, sonny. I guess we'll need you as a witness."

Jerry explained, protested, pleaded, but all in vain. It was hard to make himself heard above the roar of the elevated, and those of his ravings that the policeman did hear met with indifference. Before he could fully realize the seriousness of his plight, he was in the "Black Maria," the "newsie," sitting opposite, watching him with sympathetic interest. It seemed to Jerry that his house of happiness, which an hour ago had been so real and sure, was crumbling down on his head, just as he had seen those little French homes crumble and sink in a cloud of dust when a boche shell struck them. He had once more the same lost, sinking feeling that he had known the night before an expected attack, except that now he was afraid, not for himself, but for Amalie, coming trustingly to marry him. When he did not meet her at the station, she would think that he had deserted her. Would she ever understand, forgive? . . . even if he were able to find her?

"Say, officer," he pleaded. "At least can't you take me to the Pennsylvania station first? I swear I've got a girl waiting for me there. She don't know another soul in this town. She won't know what to do. I was going to m-m-marry her." But the policeman was cold to his entreaties; he had heard too many hard luck stories before to be moved by this one, especially as it came from a lunatic. He smiled absently, as one answers a child: "No, can't go to the train. It's a pity about your sweetheart, but I guess she can look out for herself. Anyhow, you'll have to come with me."

When they reached the station house, the prisoner was marched down a long corridor, at the end of which was a tall iron grating, and behind this, in a tiny cell, Jerry was locked. His captor had gone to the office to report.

"I brought in that looney they 'phoned us about last night. Came in on the New Haven. Says his name's Carnegie. He gave two hundred dollar bills to this boy."

"Are you sure he's the one?" asked the desk sergeant, as he entered the time and place of arrest on the station blotter.

"Couldn't be much surer," growled the other. "Fits the description all right: 'well dressed; gray suit; straw hat; blue eyes; brown hair'; gave two hundred dollars to this newsie, and told me his name was Carnegie; picked him up in front of the Grand Central station. He told me some kind of sob story about being on his way to meet a girl, but you can't believe what a lunatic says."

"Well, I guess it's him all right. I'll call up the asylum and tell them to come down and get him as quick as they can."

Meanwhile the "lunatic," sitting on the edge of his cot, gazed through the barred door with dull eyes. . . . After a long while he heard the prison clock at the end of the corridor strike "Two." He relaxed and buried his face in his hands.

BUT in the police office there had been unexpected developments. A little after half past one the telephone had rung, and when the desk sergeant picked up the receiver, he recognized the voice of Christopher, one of the force. "Send down to the Penn station, won't you?" he said. "I have that lunatic we were told to look out for—the one who thinks he's Andrew Carnegie and gives away hunks of money."

"The hell you have! We've got him here. You've got the wrong man."

"Well, that's mighty funny; he fits the description to a 'T.' I overheard him trying to thrust a lot of money on some one who was evidently a stranger to him. And when I asked his name he told me it was Andrew Carnegie. Acted like a wild bull when I put a stop to his philanthropic intentions."

"What does he look like?"

"Young man; well dressed; gray suit; straw hat; blue eyes; brown hair."

"That description seems to fit; guess you'd better bring him along. I'm expecting a keeper from the asylum soon, and he can decide which looney is his. I'll send the bus down for you P. D. Q."

Thirty minutes later the patrolman entered the office, leading, with considerable difficulty, the second "Mr. Carnegie." Kerrigan scrutinized the prisoner. "He certainly points up," he said, musingly. "But so does the other. However, the man from Hillcrest Asylum—or sanitarium, I believe they call it—will probably be here in a few moments, and can take his pick. He needn't complain that we haven't done this thing pretty thoroughly."

Just as he was speaking the door opened and the keeper in question stepped in. His eye fell immediately on the latest prisoner, and lit with a knowing gleam. He leaned over Kerrigan's desk and spoke confidentially:

"That's him," with a backward jerk of his thumb. "Where did you find him?"

"One of the men picked him up a short while ago in the Penn station. Sure you didn't lose two? We've got two that answer your description perfectly. You know we believe in being thorough."

"No, thank you; one is sufficient. But I must hurry along with him, in order to catch the next train back." Then he stepped up to "Mr. Carnegie" and shook his hand warmly. "I've come to take you with me, old man," he said, "on a little pleasure trip. How does that appeal to you?"

"Andrew" beamed. "Fine," he replied. "But you must let me share expenses with you. You know I can very well afford it. Let me give you two hundred dollars to start with."

"With the greatest of pleasure," said the keeper, pocketing the bills, and there was a slight movement of his right eyelid in the sergeant's direction as he opened the door and stood ceremoniously aside for the "millionaire" to pass out. But the wink was lost on Kerrigan, who was already absorbed in the next "case." A minute or two later he rang for one of the jailers, and when the man responded, after a short delay he said to him:

"Bring that other Carnegie who was arrested this morning. We surely owe an apology to him." The keeper found the prisoner still sitting in a dejected hump on the edge of his bed. The news of his release brought no comment from him; he simply rose and followed the turnkey down the gloomy corridor.

When they reached the office the desk sergeant came from behind the desk to shake his hand. "We really owe you a thousand apologies, Mr. Carnegie," he said, "but it was a case of mistaken identity. We have found the man whom we took you for, and are therefore releasing you. I hope the arrest hasn't seriously inconvenienced you."

Jerry, for the first time in his life, resorted to sarcasm: "O, no! You haven't inconvenienced me, not in the least! You've just spoiled my whole life, that's all. I was on my way to the station to meet a little French girl who had come to America to marry me. I told your fool policeman, but he wouldn't listen. Now it's too late. Her train came in at one, and I don't know where she's gone. I'll never find her now."

KERRIGAN was all attention. "By Jove!" he exclaimed, "it must be the same one! Listen, when they caught the lunatic who calls himself Carnegie—the one we mistook you for—he was offering money to a little French girl who seemed to be stranded in the Penn station. Christopher, who arrested him, brought her along as a witness. She seemed kind of lost, so I turned her over to an agent of the Travelers' Aid. They left only a minute ago. If you hurry you might catch them on the corner."

His advice was unnecessary; Jerry was already half way down the stairs. Half a block away he saw Amalie, small and bewildered, and the kindly, uniformed woman from the Travelers' Aid, standing on the corner waiting for the street car. It need only be said of what followed that it was entirely satisfactory to all concerned. They had just thanked the agent and started stationwards when a panting policeman overtook them. "The desk sergeant forgot to give this back to you," he cried, "the two hundred dollars you gave the newsboy. He went home an hour ago, so I guess this comes back to you, Mr. Carnegie."

Jerry pocketed the money with an air of careless unconcern. "Thank you, old man," he said genially. "I really had forgotten all about it." Then he turned to hail a passing taxi. When they were safe inside, Amalie cuddled up to him confidingly; presently she said, "Jerree, for why zat man call you 'Meestaire Carnegie'?"

The Magnificent Philanthropist swallowed hastily.

"O," he replied carelessly, "it's a name I sometimes use, for—uh—business reasons."

Out of the Golden Pack

fast, full hands clutched, tossed—her skirts pressed to their ruin in the mire that her knees had found.

A MARVELOUS instrument is the human hand. Unbelievably swift and capable at times. Man-made machinery finds it hard to attain the elasticity, the prehensile, hingelike power of the hand, frail and white as it may appear. It is not a capacious shovel—but undeniably it is a shovel of a sort. And quite early in life most hands have learned how to handle mud—in the shape of good mud pies. Afterward Stephen Bentlewin never recommended the feat to other motorists—indeed, deemed it best not to strain their credulity by telling them what had been done. But when he had, contemptuously for a while, then curiously for a while, watched Lettice's quick, fierce handfuls of clay——

A clayey spoke was clear of clay. A submerged tire seemed not so hopelessly submerged. Beside a second wheel he dropped to his knees, and began fiercely to disentangle a car with the best disentanglers at hand.

Five minutes—ten—fifteen. Hard breathing, strenuous arms. Twenty—the rim of one wheel was free, resting on comparatively solid underclay. Thirty—another rim agreed to come out and be good. Forty——

Stephen sprang to his feet. "Pretty loose except the center, I think," he said, breathing hard. "I'll try the motor again, all open——" He sprang into the front seat, applied power, was rewarded by a rebellious but effective puffing. He threw open a clutch—waited breathlessly—and the car backed slowly but surely out of its limited bed and onto good solid ground at the rear.

Lettice, who had waited with straining eyes and ears, clambered in breathlessly beside him. She was a soiled, grimy person. The white silk dress was forever ruined. Her slippers were mud carriers. Her fingernails were black and broken. Her delicate face was smeared out of all beauty of hue.

But Stephen Bentlewin did not waste much time inspecting her appearance. He looked at his watch once, then the car was turned snout about and was shooting back to the original crossroads, where, naturally enough, other headlights were belatedly gleaming now that their assistance was not needed.

A passing motorist, hailed, reported that a washout had been repaired. "Sure—since noon." In silence Stephen shot down the road.

It ribboned on, became crowded with other cars, noisy with honks, sprang at last in Chicago's immediate outskirts, became a boulevard. Slower, finally, with a boulevard's impeding wheels, countless cars to be passed discreetly or made way for, stops at crossings, the upheld arms of many traffic officers, the conspicuous fronts of a thousand garages, and finally the great red doorway of the hospital.

Lettice was sitting wearily in her seat when it was reached at last. Stephen looked at his watch as he brought the car to an abrupt standstill. Eleven fifty-eight.

He jumped out, with a little nod at Lettice. Inside the doors an attendant met him. "Is he here?" he asked the attendant. "Ten minutes." Swiftly, with professionally unmoved countenance, he made his way to an elevator.

FROM that elevator he emerged two hours later.

On a straight backed chair, for the convenience of visitors, Lettice sat; a patient, soiled, drooping figure.

"You still here! Why in the world——"

"I wanted to learn—if he will be all right?"

"I think so. I've not been willing to leave until now. But unless unforeseen complications set in——"

"Then—then—" she tried bravely to hold a soft under lip steady—"you won't——"

"Won't what?"

"Blame me?"

"Why, in no case would I——"

"O, yes!" She said it quietly enough; with conviction. "You'd always have seen a dead man beside me—whenever you thought of me——"

Her dark blue eyes were lifted to his. Stephen Bentlewin brushed a hand across his own eyes. On her cheek there was a great splotch of clay. That served as suggestive link, doubtless; as memory's fillip. But it was odd with what distinctness he saw, not Lettice Towne in a miry roadbed, but a small, bent, wind browned woman on a miry northern sand hillside—one shaft of her old buggy had broken and she was out of her seat and trying patiently to mend it with a bit of twine found by the way. Odd that in two women's eyes there could be the same deep glow—an understanding——

He had the sensation of having built a long and unnecessary barrier against what was very good in life. With that tenderness which denotes a peculiar possession, he took out his handkerchief to wipe the clay from her face.

"Never mind," she said with a flush.

"At least enough to——" Before the wide eyes of a hospital doorman he put his lips to the wiped cheek. A little absently, too. Because of his heritage, he was pitying some other men—Bicking, Korffer, Graisy. He would find in his future what they had pitifully missed.

DAVIS CUP DEFENDERS

THESE AMERICAN TENNIS PLAYERS will be called upon this week to defend America's possession of the Davis international tennis challenge cup, won in 1920 from Australasia and retained in 1921, when Kumagae and Shimidzu, Japanese players, were the Americans' most formidable opponents. The challenge round for the famous cup opens next Friday at Forest Hills, L. I.

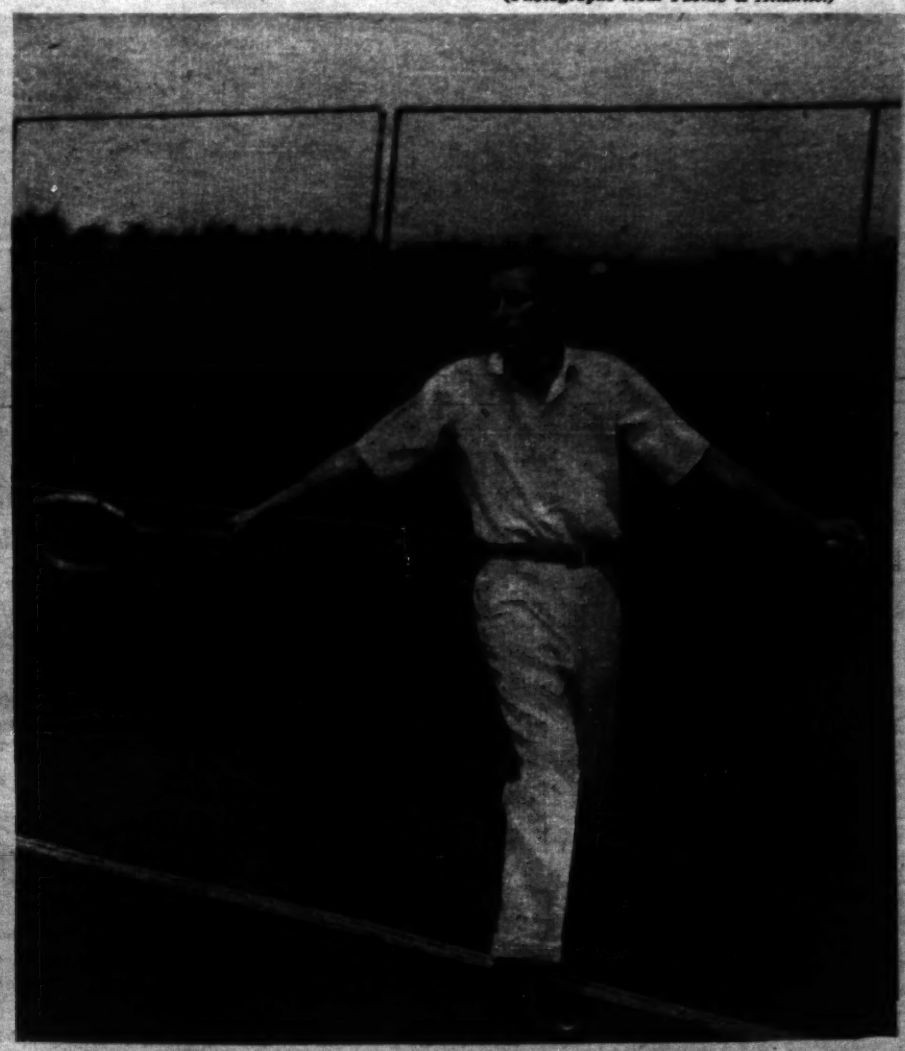
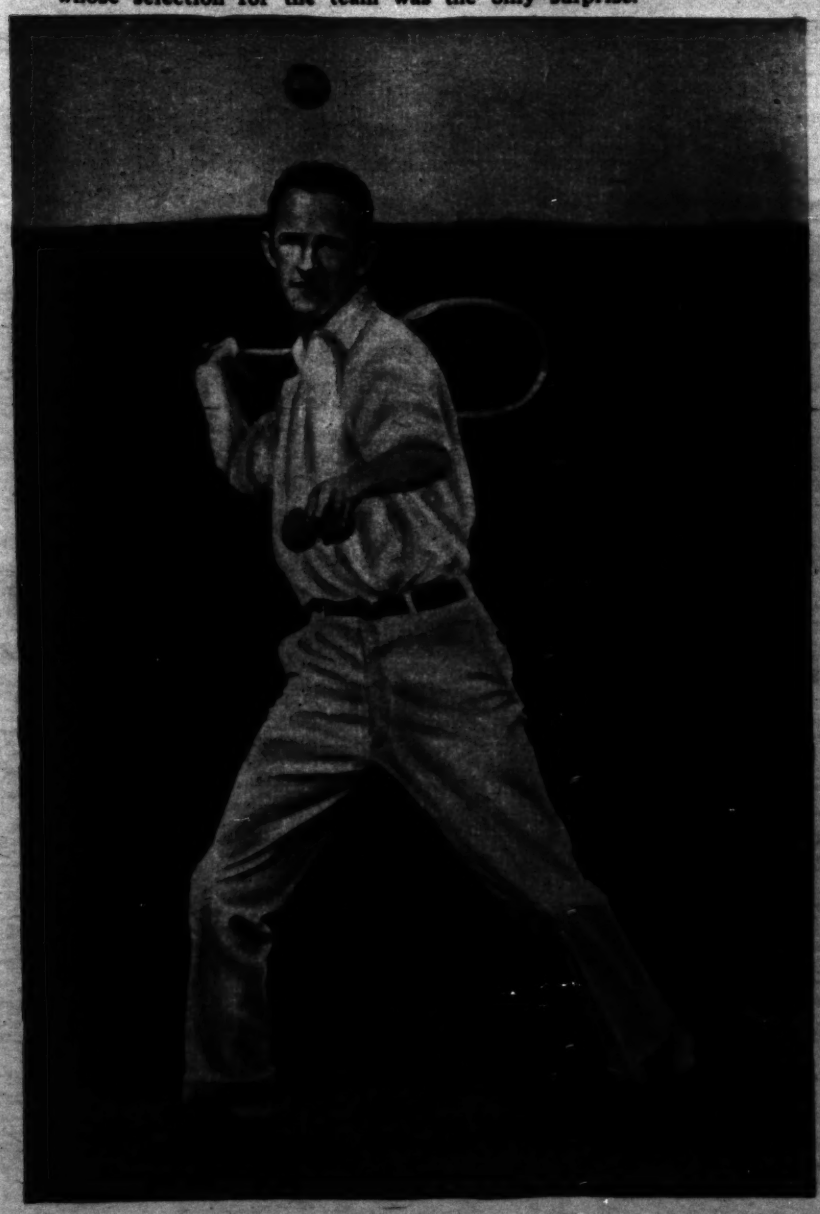
VINCENT RICHARDS, "wonder boy" of American tennis courts, whose selection for the team was the only surprise.



WILLIAM T. TILDEN II, tennis champion, who helped win the cup for this country in both 1920 and 1921.



WILLIAM M. JOHNSTON, who shared the honors of victory with Tilden in the contests of 1920 and 1921.

R. NORRIS WILLIAMS again will be the captain of the defenders, as he was during last year's exciting cup contests.

THE MAGNIFICENT PHILANTHROPIST By Mary Day Winn

It's Surprising the Amount of Trouble That May Follow the Gift of $200 from a Munificent but Absolute Stranger.

THE telephone on the desk of the police station rang sharply; Kerrigan picked up the receiver with a scowl:

"Hello!"

"Hello! Long distance calling New York police."

"That's me; fire away."

"This is the Hillcrest Sanitarium at Rye, a private insane asylum. Tell your men to be on the lookout for an escaped lunatic headed your way. He knocked down a clerk in our office, picked up all the spare cash in the drawer, and got away."

"Huh!" grunted the desk sergeant in an aside to Morley, his clerk, covering the mouthpiece with his hand. "He says a lunatic picked up all the asylum's cash and got away." Then, to the telephone again: "What does he look like?"

"Young man; well dressed; gray suit; straw hat; blue eyes; brown hair; he thinks he's Andrew Carnegie and is always trying to give away money. Gets violent if you refuse to take it. Notify us as soon as you catch him, and we'll send a man down to get him."

Kerrigan was hastily scribbling the description on a pad. "Has he any other marks of identification?" he asked. "Hello! Hello! . . . O, hell! he's rung off. Now, isn't that a description for you," handing the note he had taken to Morley. "'Well dressed; gray suit; straw hat'! I wonder just how many thousands of men there are in this little town who would answer to those points!"

"Well," drawled the clerk, "you could count on the fingers of an armless veteran the men of this 'crule' city who could pose for the last part of that pen portrait: 'Always trying to give away money and gets violent when you refuse to take it.' I wish he'd try some of his insanity on me. I wouldn't give him any cause to get violent."

His superior smiled appreciatively.

"Well, forget your grouch for a while and send out this alarm to the other stations, with the description—such as it is. Tell them to keep an extra sharp lookout in the neighborhoods of the Grand Central and the Pennsylvania. He may come in at one and go out at another. It'll be easy for him to catch a train and get out in a hurry if he gets a good start of them, and they'll have a chase before they catch him." Then a self-congratulatory smile spread over his face. "But he'll have to be pretty smart to get past our net, eh, Morley?"

A GOOD many miles from the scene of this conversation Jerry Arth was engaged in performing the last solemn rites of his bachelor days. No, he was not burning old love letters; he was throwing away old clothes. When he had gathered together all the possessions worthy of his married life he took them to the shining little cottage to which he was planning to bring his bride on the following day. These personal belongings were, exclusive of his trousseau, a rather pitiful collection: a private's uniform, kit bag, and canteen; a battered silver mug; a fishing line and tackle; faded photographs of his long dead parents and a snapshot of Amalie; a package of letters from Amalie, bound together with a shoe string; and a dusty china doll, dressed in faded crêpe paper and mounted on a long stick. This last was a dance favor which had been given him by a pretty cocotte in a Parisian restaurant when, one night on furlough, he and two of his buddies had gone the rounds. Jerry cherished this senseless toy because its possession set him apart as a "gay dog," and he had always hoped for some opportunity to say carelessly, in coming across it, "Golly, I thought I'd thrown that old thing away ages ago! Devilishly pretty girl gave it to me one night in a restaurant in Paris."

He slept that night in the cottage and was up the next morning before the milkman. Jerry shaved, this day of days, with particular care, anointing his plain but rather likable face with cold cream, talcum powder and toilet water, an unusual procedure with him, but one that he felt the occasion demanded. Then his new gray suit came in for a careful brushing, and several seconds were devoted to adjusting a silk handkerchief in his coat pocket so that just the right amount of purple border would show.

Then the house must undergo its twentieth tour of satisfied inspection. It was the realization of many months of dreaming, planning, and hard work, and Jerry was very proud of it. Finally, after one last look around, he locked the front door behind him and set off to meet his bride, as happy and as agitated as the surface of a bucket of boiling water. He caught the train and settled back to two hours of blissful dreaming, enjoying, in anticipation, the long planned for meeting. He had fallen a victim to the lure of the little French girl's helpless femininity when his regiment had been stationed in her village, but he had not been able to persuade her to come to him until the rheumatic old grandmother, whose only relative she was, had died. But now Amalie was on her way.

Today her boat would reach Philadelphia, where a friend of Jerry's would meet her and put her safely on the train for New York. When she arrived, helpless and alone, in the ordered confusion of the Pennsylvania station, Jerry would be there. Thinking of this moment, he stared through the window with unseeing eyes.

Suddenly his reverie was interrupted; a politely modulated voice at his elbow was saying, "Pardon me, but is this seat taken?"

"Huh? O, no." Jerry came back reluctantly from his dream and moved over to make way for a well dressed young man with brown hair and pleasant blue eyes. The stranger removed his straw hat and wiped his moist forehead. Although he showed in his flushed face and slightly disheveled hair signs of having hurried, there was about him, somehow, an air of the most perfect composure. Finally he replaced his hat and sat regarding the other passengers with an air of benevolent interest. For a few moments they rode on in silence: Jerry looked him over covertly out of the corner of his eye.

"Wonder what he'd think," he mused, "if he knew that the fellow next to him was on his way to be married."

As the train passed through Larchmont they could see through the window an imposing brick building. The stranger smiled pleasantly and pointed to it. "Fine library, isn't it?" he said.

"It sure is."

"Yes, I like it. I gave it to the town. I've given libraries to most of these towns around here."

The bridegroom's eyes opened wide. "You don't say so!"

"O, yes. That is nothing." Then, with an obvious attempt to be sociable: "Running down to the city on business or getting off in one of these towns?"

"O, . . . uh—going to the city," stammered Jerry; and then, impulsively, "I'm on my way now—to be married. Don't you think I look like a happy groom?"

The stranger turned to him quickly, his face alight with interest. "That's fine!"

"This is him."

he exclaimed. "I congratulate you. Are you meeting your bride in New York?"

"Yes, she comes in on the one o'clock train at the Pennsylvania station." Then, expanding in the warmth of his companion's evident interest, he added: "She's a little French girl; come over just to marry me. Can't speak hardly any English. If this blamed train don't hurry up I'm afraid I'll be late, and the Lord only knows what she'll do if I'm not at the station to meet her." Jerry took from his pocket and anxiously scanned for the tenth time that morning one of those intelligence tests commonly known as time tables.

"I'm all right," he mused, "if we can make up the time we've lost; but if we don't make it up I won't have much margin—just thirty minutes to go from the Grand Central to the Pennsylvania."

As Jerry turned to put away his time table he caught the stranger's eye again; there was a strange gleam in it. He was diving into his trousers pocket. His hand came forth grasping a crumpled mass of bills.

"We can't let a momentous occasion like a wedding go uncelebrated," he smiled. "Here's a little gift for your French bride, with A. Carnegie's compliments." Into the hand of the astounded bridegroom he put two one hundred dollar bills! Jerry's simple face registered half a dozen different emotions at once. Then, coming to himself, he hastily thrust the money back into his companion's hand.

"O, thank you awfully," he stuttered, "but I—I couldn't possibly accept it."

The sudden change that swept over the man's pleasant countenance was terrifying. He pushed the money fiercely away; his brows lowered and his face flushed; there was an almost maniacal gleam in his eye. "You will take it!" he hissed. "I'll have no refusal, damn you!" Then he jumped from the seat, reached for his straw hat, and before his cowering victim had come to his senses, had jumped off the train, which was just then stopping at a station.

ALMOST every one at some time in his life—generally quite early—likes to imagine what it would be like if some one should give him, just so, a "whole lot of money." He lets his fancy play around the delightful possibilities which its spending suggests. The one thing which he never imagines is—refusing it. And yet that is exactly what the average grownup would do, immediately and emphatically. He has lost the child's naive confidence in the world's good will. Mortals are a wary and suspicious lot, and no one more so than Jerry—when sober. Instantly he made up his mind that the bills had been stolen, that they were marked money, or perhaps counterfeit. Any minute he might be caught with them in his possession, and no one would believe his explanation of how he got them. He would be arrested, and then——! Suddenly a new and even more terrifying thought came skipping into his befuddled brain. A year ago he had just escaped making intimate acquaintance with the New York police. Simple and unsuspecting, and also at the time somewhat under the "influence," he had been seized upon by two clever rogues and made the cat's paw in an undertaking of very questionable legality. The thought of how narrow had been his escape still filled his mind with terror. In fact, it had influenced him in finally seeking work elsewhere, as he imagined that the master detective minds of the city were still on the lookout to catch him. He felt safe enough while he was lost in the crowd, but if he were to be arrested for any reason and taken to police headquarters his past misdeeds would be recalled, with heaven knew what fearful penalties. And what would become of Amalie when he was in prison? This thought beaded his forehead with perspiration. He gazed with fear and loathing at the crisp, crumpled bills in his hand. How to get rid of them? He tried to raise the window, but it was immovable. Then he thought of stuffing the bills between the cushions of the seat, and made an elaborately careless move in that direction. But, looking around to see if he was observed, he met the coldly questioning gaze of a man across the aisle. As this stranger's curious gaze never left him for the rest of the trip, further attempts to get rid of the money were, for the time being, impossible.

After an agonizing ten minutes the train pulled into the Grand Central and an agitated bridegroom, very conscious of two hundred dollars in his trousers pocket and very unconscious of the existence of a shuttle train, was borne along by the hurrying crowd until he found himself on Forty-second street. The noise, hurry, and confusion of the crowded thoroughfare bewildered him at first, and he paused for a second to get his bearings. Suddenly he was aware of a shrill, insistent voice at his elbow:

"Mister! Mister! Buy a paper!" Jerry turned to see a ragged boy looking up at him.

"No, I don't want a paper."

"Aw, mister"—a dirty hand caught hold of his coat—"please buy a paper, woncher? Me mother's sick, and Dad's out of work, and the kids——"

Never before did whining beggar receive so ready a response. The door stood open wide for escape; Jerry dashed through it. Assuming as nonchalant and plutocratic an air as possible, he thrust his hand into his trousers pocket and placed in the child's grimy paw two crisp one hundred dollar bills.

"Take these, my boy," he said grandiloquently, "and—uh—uh—get a doctor for your mother."

The child gave the money one quick glance, and then another, startled and incredulous. "Golly, mister! Did you see what you give me? Did you mean to give me all dat?"

"Yes. Uh—that is nothing; say no more about it," and the magnificent giver edged away into the crowd, with very much the appearance of a criminal fleeing from the scene of his crime.

The newsboy stood still for a second, gazing with fascinated eyes at his fortune. Then his native shrewdness came to his rescue.

"Gee!" he exclaimed. "No matter what I try to do wid des bills, dey'll say I copped 'em. Nobody'll swaller it when I say a gent give 'em to me. Guess I'd better call in de law as a witness."

His eye fell on a nearby policeman, and, going up to this imposing person with the fearlessness born of spotless righteousness,

The YELLOW

THE picture at the right has received from the first copper cylinder those portions to appear in yellow.

IN this picture the red ink has been received from the second cylinder. Where the red comes above the yellow, orange is produced. All variations in color are made in this way, by combining the primaries: red, yellow and blue.

The BLUE

AS the paper passes the next cylinder it receives all those portions which are to appear in blue. Notice how the blue ink has combined with the yellow, the red, and the various mixtures of yellow and red, to make still further colors.

The BLACK

FINALLY, over all the "color" is thrown the black "key." This sharply defines the areas of color and gives body to the illustration. These four impressions are received in only a few seconds' time as the paper rolls continuously through the press.

THE TEENIE WEENIES.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

HE CERTAINLY WAS A MAD RABBIT.

BY WM. DONAHEY.

EARLY one morning the Teenie Weenie autos chugged out from beneath a big bush, where they had parked for the night, and set off towards the wild men's country. The General in his roadster, with the Indian as guide, led the way, and close behind followed the two Teenie Weenie trucks. The Lady of Fashion, Sally Guff, the Turk, Gogo, the Cowboy, Zip, and Paddy Pinn made up the party. The two trucks were loaded with all sorts of things which were to be traded to the wild men for frog hams and wild rice. The wild men were a tiny race of little people, about the size of the Teenie Weenies, and they lived on a little island in the center of a big swamp. Wild rice and frogs were plentiful there, and the General expected to get enough from the wild men to supply the Teenie Weenies through the winter.

It was a long way to the wild men's country, and the little autos had to pick their way through the thickest jungles of briers and bushes. Once they found it so tangled with bushes the trucks had to stop and wait while the General and the Indian drove ahead in the General's roadster in order to find a better road.

The General and the Indian were gone a long time; in fact, they were gone so long the rest of the Teenie Weenies grew alarmed, and they finally decided to drive ahead and see if they could find the General. They had only driven a short distance when the Turk stepped on his brake with all his might, for a big rabbit suddenly appeared in the road directly ahead.

"Well, I say!" exclaimed the startled rabbit, the end of his long ears twitching nervously. "This is a pretty kettle of raspberries, frightening an honest person half out of his senses!"

"Scare cat! Scare cat!" chortled a voice overhead, and looking up the Teenie Weenies saw a woodpecker sitting on a limb of the bush above.

"O, is that so?" replied the rabbit in his coolest rabbit manner. "Well, let me tell you, you red headed hammer bill, I'd hate to be half as chicken hearted as you."

"O, say not so! Say not so, old fuzzy ear!" answered the woodpecker in a most tantalizing manner.

The rabbit grew quite angry and he stamped the ground so hard with his big hind feet he fairly rattled the two tiny trucks. "Let me at him! Let me at him!" shouted the angry rabbit. "Just let me get hold of him!"

"Well, no one is interfering, old short tail!" cried the woodpecker. "Why don't you climb the bush or fly up and bite some feathers off?"

"O! O! O!" wailed the rabbit, grinding his teeth. "O, if I but had wings I'd fly up there and strip you to your last pin feather, you worm eating wretch!"

"Gentlemen, gentlemen," said the Turk, who had climbed out of his truck and stood on the ground before the rabbit. "I beg of you gentlemen to give me a few directions. We seem to be lost, and I'd like to ask of you the best road to the big swamp."

"Old scare cat here won't be able to tell you," answered the woodpecker, winking at the Turk. "He always travels in a circle and he'd have you right back to this same spot in about five minutes if you followed his directions."

The rabbit grew so angry he fairly danced in his rage. He pounded the ground and squealed in such an alarming way that the Teenie Weenies were much frightened for fear the rabbit might have a stroke or some other terrible thing. Fortunately the General drove up at that minute and announced that he had found a good road.

"What kept you so long?" asked the Turk. "We were worried you were gone so long."

"O, we ran against a thistle and got a puncture in one of the front tires," answered the General.

The Teenie Weenies turned around, and as they drove away they heard the angry squeals of the rabbit and the teasing voice of the woodpecker as they continued their wordy battle.

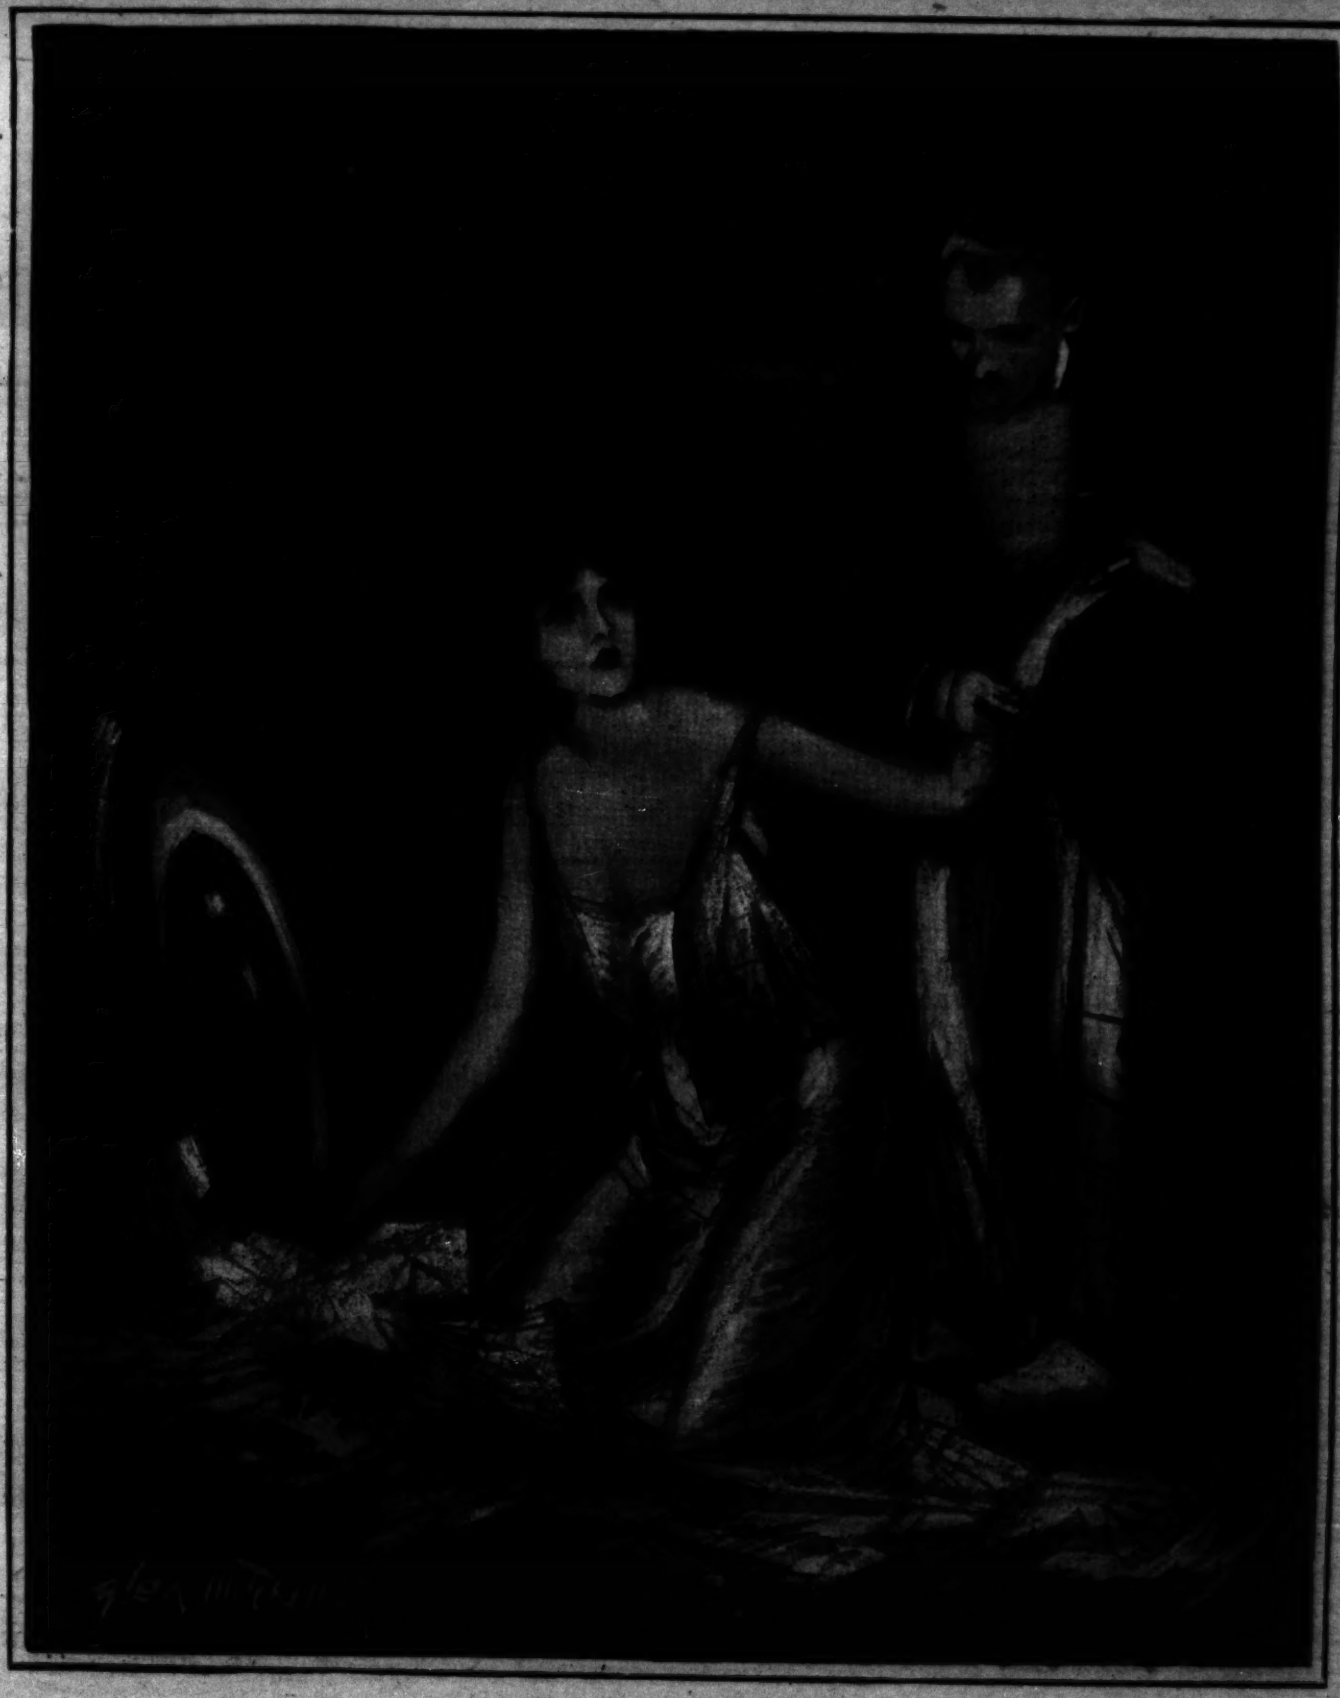
How the COLORS come in COLOR to

Out of the Golden Pack

by Ida M. Evans

She Was Lovely and 26; He Was 37, and Always the Shade of His Mother, the Small, Bent, Wind-Browned, Rain-Soaked Woman Doctor, Hovered About.



FROM that first night Stephen Bentlewin knew that Lettice Towne had wiped other women—except one—from his mind. But even then he feared that in the end he would decide against marrying her. Had he been, say, twenty-five years old, he would doubtless have married her in passion and in a rush. At twenty-five one still believes in a Santa Claus with a golden pack of futures for men and women.

Lettice looked like a lovely gift for some man. Sitting a little back from the fireplace at the end of the Wellmans' expensive Lake Shore hall, in a misty pale green chiffon dinner gown whose extreme low cut was most kind to her white neck and shoulders, she exhibited that cared-for-petal perfection which is possessed in common by hothouse roses and many women of this modern masseuse and steam heat day.

Her crossed feet in their misty satin slippers were narrow, high arched, and attractive to a man and an anatomist. Her black-brown hair was waved low and caught with a high stone set comb, as was the month's mode. The mode was kind to Lettice Towne's delicate contour of cheek and white chin and to her eyes, which were so dusky a blue as to be almost black.

A little bored, a little disdainful, that first evening, she was watching her younger sister Flossy, Jane Wellman, and others who, rouged lacquerlike, bobbed of hair, and visible of young knees, were trying with shrill voices and an assortment of jazz records to live up to all that has ever been imputed to flapperdom by fiction writers, parents, and the world in general. The younger crowd threw Lettice and others into an indistinct relief. Between sixteen and twenty-six, nowadays, there are not years but at least two or three generations.

But Stephen Bentlewin was neither sixteen nor twenty-six. He was thirty-seven. He had men friends who were husbands—surgeons, and internes, and some not belonging to his own profession. And some of these were outspoken. Some were reticent—tight lipped, ran the phrase—but Stephen in many instances had eyes to supply what had never been told him. He had good eyes, or he would not have become the successful person he was. And even Bickings (one of the tight lipped) had once grunted in an after-dinner semi-professional conclave: "The sex isn't quinine. You can't say thus or thus or so and thus will a man's spirit react to a long or a short dose of some woman."

Korffer, whose eyes were a glittering black and whose hair was a washed out gray, was ironically acquiescent. "Stimulate him or stagnate him——"

Bickings finished oracularly: "Man, there's no way of telling beforehand!"

Stephen Bentlewin learned a little about Lettice the next day from Bickings, who had known the Townes since the four children had the mumps. "Good family. Nice girl—Lettice. Let's see, she must be about twenty-six. Jim treats his wife and children well. Keeps 'em dressed up. Guess that's why Lettice has taken her time to marry—home's comfortable. Don't believe, though [grunt of vigorous disapproval], Jim salts away much toward appendicitis or gallstones."

Stephen knew the type. His office girl had many such names on his books. Brokers, salesmen, advertising men, they and their families were the rank and file of a city doctor's best practice.

He changed the subject. (Bickings and others described Bentlewin as tight lipped.) But even then he had begun relentlessly to compare Lettice Towne with another woman—the little, bent, scrawny, purposeful one who had borne him. It was unfair to Lettice Towne, perhaps. Admitting this, he could not restrain the comparison.

"Lettice! Get up! I insist!"

WHEN he was nine years old, freckled, barelegged, and bramble scratched most of the year, not overfed or overclothed any month of the year, he had taken his mother to be an ordinary parent. Stephen did not know that at that time brackets belonged to a "woman doctor."

Since then, as he had attained skill, he had dissected Cora Bentlewin, tenderly enough, analyzed her, given her a "humanity complex," a lonely soul and a timid but purposeful nature.

She must have had all three, so he guessed, or she would not have continued to live on, after his father's death, in that sparsely settled, poverty inhibited northern sandhill district, and minister to its needs without any expectation of proper recompense.

She and Stephen's father had been students at the same medical school. Stephen never understood just why the two settled in those northern sandhills, in a three room shack with its few wretched acres. Perhaps for his father's health or because two poor graduates could not afford to go farther or make a better break for a practice.

His father had died five years later. Stephen's childhood was a series of grim pictures.

An old, rattling buggy and a gaunt horse and a little, bent woman going forth wind and rain, all seasons of the year, to answer calls. Long, hilly, sandy roads, scrub oak or hazelbrush at their sides, scratching a horse's helpless ribs. Northern winters that nipped Stephen's small, lean body. Through those sandy hills the wind slashed like a saw. (Although she never took him along on the worst days.)

Worst days or best, he could not recall that she ever refused to go herself, no matter what the hour of night, what the miles to some "foreigner's" kitchen bedroom and shackful of numerous progeny. Those she attended in their sicknesses——

Well, they were not to blame. Mostly their land was poor and their families were large. In retrospect, to Stephen, his mother seemed always to have had a meditative hand on that small, shabby bag of instruments and bottles, always to have been upsucking a lower lip over the cost of medicines which she must willy nilly furnish her patients or watch them die before her for lack of medicine. Poverty stalked the countryside. Farmers, who had bought their holdings on time, toiled almost with tooth and nail for any return from their small, arid acres. Many of them drank—home made stuff, of course, when they could get no other. They stared inept and sullen when their families needed tonic or febrifuge. Stephen early was used to sullen, unshaven men, vacuous eyed women, shapeless from hoeing or digging, with their straggling background of children and wretched bedclothes.

Came over a five dollar bill, or even a two dollar, his mother's way, and promptly it posted to city wholesale house for quinine, calomel, aconite, podophyllin, and chloroform. He remembered once asking her what she'd really like to have for Christmas. "Two thousand grains of quinine, son," she said gloomily. "That swamp four miles west of Nord's hill——"

She died one spring—of a common cold which went into bronchitis because a wet, mischief lit her blue eyes and put a quirk to her lips; but it was the mischief of the gamin, without evil.

JENNY MALLOY was a product of the great city, of the most prodigal and wasteful and careless city on earth; an overgrown child of a city, morally and intellectually weak, yet wonderful to behold. In her youth Jenny's playground had been the gutters; now her playground was the night life, the endless circle of restaurants and cabarets. Nancy was of that unhappy breed who are forever questing Holy Grails, and bruising and losing themselves in metaphysical swamps. Jenny's horizon was bounded by crabmeat and lobsters.

She was shrewd, cynical, slangy and honest. She was in constant demand because she was good fun; but she was a rough fencer, if a man took up the wrong foil with her. She was as wary and as chaste as Diana, and her pathway was strewn with a certain caliber of Actaeons. She mothered the green chorus girl into self-reliance; and loved Nancy Bowman with all her heart, and understood her not at all.

"Kid, how about some grand eats?" she said. "Wild duck an' apple-sauce, an' all that? Good scouts, no rah-rah boys; friends o' mine. With a little fox-trottin' on th' side. How about it?"

"I'm sorry, Jenny, but I'm in no mood for it tonight."

"That's why I ask you. You'll go home an' mope; an' it won't do you a bit o' good."

"Besides, I don't know your friends."

"For th' love o' Mike!—I know 'em, don't I? Ain't that enough? If you was a prude, I wouldn't bother you; but you're reg'lar when you warm up. What you need, more'n anythin' else, is a night out. I been watchin' you. You're goin' t' mope yourself out of a fine job, believe me, Aloysius! Be alive for once; forget th' future for a coupla hours. I never pick 'em dead; but I never pick 'em fresh, either. Come on. We'll take turns holdin' th' pup. Eh, Ling, old sport? An' you'll go home as dry as this Sahara dump they call New York. Come on; we're dead a long time, so they tell me."

"Please, Jenny dear! I'd only be a kill-joy. I've a lesson, too, at nine in the morning."

"Listen, kid, we've roosted next door t' each other for two years, now. Have you ever found that I pulled anythin' that wasn't straight, or introduced you t' any one who wasn't reg'lar?"

"No, Jenny. But we've gone over this so often! It's the way I'm made. I don't enjoy these false good times; and I'm never hungry enough to accept a strange man's attentions in exchange for lobster. I can't enjoy myself with strangers."

"Gee—if that ain't the limit! How do you come t' know folks if you don't meet 'em for th' first time?" Jenny closed the door resolutely. "Nancy, I'm goin' t' slip you somethin' for your own good. You've gone big; you're on th' way t' th' lights, if on'y I can wise you up. Here I am, six years at it, an' still with th' merry villagers; an' here you are, th' hit o' th' show. You sing like a bird, an' dance like Pavlova. An' yet, th' way you're goin', Nancy George W. Bowman will never get int' th' signs. Why? Because you ain't never in anythin' you do; you're a thousand miles in th' air all th' time. You ain't in your parts. But you're so darned clever you've flimflammed everybody but me."

"Jenny!"—alarmed lest some one might overhear.

"Let me get it all off my chest. You've got that flooey grand-opera bug in your bonnet. Fat chance! Have you got a cast-iron body, a heart as tender as tripe, an' a prima-donna for a friend? You have not. You've got as much chance of singin' in th' Metropolitan as I have o' pullin' Ethel Barrymore's job away from her."

"Why, Jenny!"

"You keep still! I'm goin' through with this. You've made this show. You don't realise that here is your game. How you do it, Lord knows, with your mind elsewhere. So if you really got in you'd be haulin' down seven or eight hundred a week next season, your name on th' signs, an' all that. You don't give th' press agent a hairpin t' go by; you leave him flat. You take seventy-five, when you ought t' be pullin' down three times as much. An' tomorrow mornin' you'll be spoilin' my beauty sleep with th' jewel song from 'Faust.' Gee, if I could on'y wake you up t' th' fact that this is your game! An' it's apple pie t' you. If you can do as you do without wantin' to, think of what you could do if you'd wake up. . . . Don't interrupt me! I'm never goin' t' say anythin' again; I'm goin' t' finish th' solo now."

"You've got as much chance of singin' in th' Metropolitan as I have o' pullin' Ethel Barrymore's job away from her."

Nancy's expression was one of bewildered indignation.

Jenny went on. "You never go out anywhere; you never have any fun. I've asked you t' go with me a thousand times. Work, work, work—all for somethin' you ain't sure of! I knew you'd turn me down t' night as usual; but I had t' get this off my chest. How about that pup? You keep it, but you won't pay for it. Much as th' girls like you, they're talkin' about that Peke. You ain't playin' the game, buddy. All Mr. Craig wants is th' privilege o' visitin' with you once in awhile—nothin' worse 'n ten. He wants t' be your friend. Why do you hate him?"

"I don't hate him, Jenny," said Nancy, wearily.

"Are you afraid o' him?"

"I don't know."

"Is it because he gets a mild souse once in a while? Then forget it. He's always a gentleman. He's no rounder, though those who don't know him think so. You know th' story. His wife ran away with another man, an' they was both killed that same night in an auto smash. An' now he goes around tryin' t' forget. He wants your friendship because you're different. He doesn't want my friendship; an' if he was a rounder, I'd be his style."

NANCY'S arm tightened around Ling Foo. A trap; she had fallen into a trap. If she had sent back the dog the first day, she would not now be in this cul de sac. The cleverness of the man, and the patience of him! He had not said a word or written. He had sent the dog to her when, by some infernal instinct, he had known that her spirit would be at its nadir. Jenny was right. She hadn't played the game. Either she must return Ling Foo or meet the man's advances half way.

"What I'm tryin' t' get int' your dome is, that you're sittin' on top o' th' world; but you've got t' dig in t' hang there. You're no fool; you can take care of yourself. You don't have t' wabble t' get your name in th' lights. Wake up out o' the grand-opera trance; here's your meal-ticket. Mannheim's a white man, an' he'll give you fair play."

"I'm sorry you're angry, Jenny."

"Angry? Why, you poor kid! It's because I love you better than anybody in th' world; an' it busts me all up t' see you try for what you can't get an' let slide th' thing you can! That's my grouch."

"Is Mr. Craig in your party tonight?"

"No."

"Is he in the theater?"

"He was."

"Do you know where he lives?"

"Yes."

Nancy thrust out Ling Foo. "Will you take him back for me?"

"You mean it?" cried the astonished Jenny.

"Yes. It will tear me all to pieces for a few days; but my friendship isn't something anybody can purchase." Nancy was white, but resolute.

"You poor kid!" Jenny caught her friend in her arms, puppy and all. "You won't have t' give him up. He stopped me t'night an' said th' pup was yours without any conditions; that if he couldn't have your friendship in th' clear, he wouldn't offer t' buy it. That's th' kind of a guy he is. He won't bother you no more."

"He hasn't bothered me, actually; only the thought of him"; Nancy began to weep without sound upon the shoulder of her friend.

"Well, well; th' Lord didn't make no two of us alike, sure enough. You're a queer piece o' furniture, but I'm for you. But you're sittin' on top o' th' world, if you'll on'y get wise. Your voice is like honey, kid, but there ain't no drama in it. You're fire when you dance; but your voice never gives any one th' shivers, like it ought to, if you're goin' to warble 'Rigoletto' an' all that. That's the solemn truth, Nancy. I don't know, but that's what th' conductor says, an' he knows. I'm hurtin' you, but I got t' to do it. When a tooth aches, you don't say 'Naughty, naughty!'—you go an' have it out—biff!"

"I'm a snob, too," said Nancy finding her voice.

"Forget it. Your poor old Daddy Bowman meant well, but he put a lot o' bunk int' your head about mankind being rotten, when it ain't so worse. There's always a coupla wormy chestnuts t' th' pint. Come on out int' th' world. Who knows? Y' might run int' somebody who'd be interested enough t' help you. You can't fight that kind of a game alone, like you're doin'. Get int' this game, get int' th' lights, show 'em you're alive. Next year you go t' th' Metropolitan conductor. Who are you? he says coldly. I'm Nancy Bowman, says you, haughtily. An' he puts a crick in his back kowtowin'. But, oh, lady this is th' world for you, if you'll on'y see it. So long. See you in th' mornin'."

rainy body did not put itself into dry clothing until a gaunt, wet horse had been unharnessed, fed, and bedded in a shed barn.

STEPHEN was thirteen. For two years or so he worked for his board with a fairly decent family nearby. Later he sold his few wretched acres and house for a few hundred dollars and got to Chicago and, by pure triumph of mind over matter, through "Rush Medical."

He was a man who made friends. He was not vain. Sometimes he suspected that his surgical and drug skill was half vicarious, not so much original as parentally inspired. He looked at his long, lean, careful but not genius tipped fingers and surmised that the two who bore him had given him, for all their willingness, but half a heritage. But he had a keen mind and a conscientious mind, and in time—by the time he was destined to meet Lettice Towne—he was earning around twenty thousand dollars, he was on the consulting staff of several Chicago hospitals, his opinion on tonsils and adenoids was considered to be worth quotation marks, and his office in a towering creamstone State street office building held for waiting patients a desk and a long bench of the best dark renaissance walnut.

Although no one knew this—and he was careful to tell no one, deeming the matter his own private affair—his small, bent, wind browned, rain soaked mother often stood beside him at that renaissance walnut desk, paused to look over the bench ranged with patients, often sat with him in his inner office where men and women stripped their bodies and their souls for his diagnosis, and once or twice she had poohpoohed in his ear while with a confrere he had discussed the inconvenience of night calls.

She vaguely seemed to afford a quizzical contrast to Lettice Towne those first few months.

His meetings with Lettice were casual ones; edged necessarily with infrequency into the professional days of a busy and preoccupied man. Once or twice they met on the street; otherwise at dinners or evening gatherings mostly under the Wellman roof. He gave Dan and Maud Wellman due credit for putting him and Lettice in each other's way. Adroitly, so they thought.

FRIENDSHIPS are made as well as born. His friendship with fat, rich Dan Wellman had begun twelve years before over a business and professional men's gathering to boost Chicago. Stephen Bentlewin was too busy a man to have many time taking friendships. But he had come to regard his bimonthly dinners and occasional week-ends with the Wellmans as acceptable relaxation. Once or twice before Maud, stout, overdressed, and overroused for her age, but considered a very smart president for a north shore current events club, had tried to marry Stephen off. He had never been tempted by her bait—until Lettice appeared.

Tempted—he corrected himself. He was not tempted now. Dangerously, that is. He laid the pros against the cons. Besides love and money the greatest modern argument for marriage is loneliness. He had his moments of that, of course. He had no ties of family. It is only the abnormally strong individual who can get along without more or less intimate ties. But an absorbed and successful professional man is likely to realise personal loneliness less than many people must realize it. Overlapping office and hospital hours, his work itself, the needs of a never ceasing line of ailing bodies, his professional associates and societies—all these warded off loneliness of the present and, to a degree, of old age to come.

Furthermore, he had seen almost as much loneliness inside the marriage pen as outside it! His work gave him almost merciless vantage for seeing. The interiors he saw—the acrid homes he entered! And even in his own professional circle——

There was Korffer of glittering black eyes and washed out gray hair, whose consultation fees alone brought him in around fifteen thousand dollars a year, but whose medical desk was heaped so high each first of month with modiste bills, millinery bills, masseuse bills, caterers' bills, household bills, that every end of month saw his bank account overdrawn and Korffer's nerves had an edge he permitted to few of his patients.

There was Bickings, general practitioner, with his full, immobile face and sarcasm. Mrs. Bickings weighed two hundred and forty-two pounds and was a leading and contributing member of half a dozen charity boards. Stephen had heard that thirty years before she and Bickings eloped because her parents considered her too young to marry. Now Bickings apologized mechanically when he had kept dinner waiting, even to perform a major operation, eyed small, dirty boys wistfully and wished he could adopt one.

There was Caldson who when an interne had given up a scholarship prize, two years in a foreign university, because Mrs. Caldson would not go so far from her family for so long. Caldson was bald now and fat and not a very good allopathist. Never sure of his own judgment. Some innate fault in the man himself, of course. Still——

There was old Dowey—who hid his non-paying patients' names in a secret drawer of his desk. There was young Stillwell, who reddened when slander suits were mentioned. There was Grainy, too, with his huge practice and huger fear that eventually Mrs. Grainy would win her way and he would consent to move to New York—and, at fifty-four, build again.

Extreme cases, Stephen admitted. Well—not so extreme, but garnered a little prejudicially by himself. He had no great fear that he himself would come to apologise for dinner tardiness. But he said to himself that he could place Lettice Towne.

Especially after he met Jim Towne. Jim was fifty-two years old, with a large chin and well polished shoes, and he worried over his liver, the state of the stock market, the disarmament conference, and the ultimate fate of light wines. Stephen Bentlewin liked Jim, whose face was a trifle too flushed for perfect health at fifty-two and who had a nervous way of thumping with a thumb the arms of his chair.

JIM was a commonly met type—and not the worst earth knows. He bragged about his business and his daughters. "Other people can stew over their offspring. I don't have to. They take after their mother in looks—and I didn't marry Mrs. Jim Towne for the way she could cook. Say, by the way, did y' hear Metal Motors Accessories dropped to six and three-fourths yesterday? Y'know, I don't often get caught on the wrong side of the market—for all my little flyers are only infrequent. But this time—yep, it's down to that——"

Business of worried thumb thumping on arm of chair.

Stephen Bentlewin guessed that with the Metal Motors' drop Lettice or her flapper sister Flossie had had to be denied something, and Jim did not like to deny them. He intercepted a look between Dan and Jim which took in Stephen in passing. He guessed that Jim was "sizing him up" as a possible member of his family—understood the cordial handclasp with which Jim later left him. Jim did not desire to get rid of his girls—he was too much the modern father. But he'd just as soon see them satisfactorily cared for either by career or marriage. Before men like Jim Towne, who perennially live up to or beyond income, old age stalks as a specter for self and family, a crueler figure to the imagination than any werewolf known to mediævals. "There is no grimmer specter than modern old age without an income.

Unless one lives in a northern sandhill district and has a peculiar disregard of income and personal comfort, Stephen Bentlewin could not picture Lettice Towne in that setting, with that peculiar disregard, even after one day he met her on Michigan avenue. It was a sleety day and she was driving Jim's medium priced family car dexterously through a sleet covered tangle of other cars. A lovely color ran up her delicate face at sight of him.

He said to himself that he was not in love with her and he had no intention of allowing himself to believe that he was in love with her. He was not a young and impressionable interne with his first blue eyed nurse. But it was with a curious involuntary alacrity that a few days later he accepted an invitation to dine at the Wellman table and afterward take in a play downtown.

Lettice was at the dinner table; white shouldered, satin clad, in beaded evening slippers. For some reason she was a little pessimistic. Stephen suspected the cause to be her father's recent unlucky dabble in Metal Motors Accessories; although she took care to explain that it was merely because she had a birthday that month.

"And I feel older than I am," she sighed. "You know I'm at the wrong age."

"O——"

"Wrong, considering the world's age," she continued. "I don't fit. There's a lot of us who don't. We haven't any special talents, and there's no war to make us feel important and useful. And the flapper crowd won't let us feel young."

Stephen smiled. Dan roared.

"It's the truth," said Lettice. "My sister Flossy and her friends affect me just like a bunch of colts in a parlor. I might be one of their parents—they irritate me so. But I'm not old enough," plaintively, "to be a parent of 'em. This spring I think I'll have to attend a course of Hindu lectures on Applied Psychology for Occidentals. I'm conscious of a gap in myself."

Had it not been for Cora Bentlewin whose life had held no gaps—Stephen was annoyed because he was angry at Lettice's plaintive cynicism. He reflected that he himself could place her fairly well. She was the old inadequate kind of woman under modern veneer. Lectures on psychology by some strutting lecturer fill hours that once had to go toward making doilies. He reflected further that he had more respect for the flappers themselves, in all their riot and rude yanking of old Lady Life's hair under the impression that they were thereby proving intimate acquaintance with that old person whom Plato and others have professed to find difficult of acquaintance.

And then, between dinner and the first act of the play which followed, his pulse beat faster. Why? As he helped Lettice into the Wellman car and his hand touched her bare elbow, her loose evening coat sleeve having fallen back, a lovely color ran up her delicate profile.

In view of what was to come months later it was of some significance that, at the end of the second act that night, a messenger boy from Hammond Wettles himself slipped a summons to Stephen. Wettles, the breakfast food king, who could not digest his own products, was chronically threatened with appendicitis, but shied from the necessary operation like an old horse from a high fence.

Stephen obeyed the summons, although Lettice smiled "Must you?" and Dan Wellman snorted, "Dog's life you lead, Steve."

But because that last disappointed lift of Lettice's eyes stayed with him, giving rise to a certain reflection on his part, Stephen was somewhat absent minded with an old pain gripped man. Afterward he blamed himself. Had he been more insistent Wettles might have yielded then on a long mooted point and saved himself and Stephen much trouble.

"I'm afraid of the knife," said Wettles ill humoredly. "And it's my own business."

"Yours," agreed Stephen.

"Then why urge——"

"It's my business to urge," said Stephen curtly.

"I'm old," argued Wettles. "And possibly the protracting of my life wouldn't benefit the world a tinker's dam. Can you say?"

"I can't say." Stephen Bentlewin had his own candid way of speech with such men as Wettles. "But that is not my concern. A fuse doesn't stop to find out whether it will help light a happy home or touch off an anarchist's bomb. It is concerned only with its own job—which is to be a fuse. My job is to keep human bodies in best condition."

OLD Hammond Wettles heard, grunted, sighed gloomily, and promised to bear his own condition in mind after a business trip to New York.

He went to New York. A diphtheria epidemic quarreled for stage space with the year's influenza. A boiler explosion in a factory sickeningly marked one week. Hammond Wettles wrote that he would return presently—"and, mind, no saw but yours, Bentlewin, if saw it must be." Stephen, who was grimly devoid of vanity, disapprovingly reflected that Wettles better act faster and be less particular as to the saw's wielder, and then forgot Wettles. He dined several times with the Wellmans, which meant with Lettice Towne, and he dined once at the Towne table itself and he played golf twice out north where Lettice happened to be playing.

Lettice played golf—on nice days, when it was not too warm or too cold, she said.

That admission from her was turned over afterward in Stephen Bentlewin's mind amid a turning over of other facts connected with her. Opposed to it, opposed to the other facts, were her eyes, black-blue against that golf turf; her little trick of coloring when she made a good drive; her delicate profile whipped to a flush by the early spring wind.

Since she was what she was it would be the more corroding in time to come to dislike her, to fret at a chain which bound one to her. (As Bickings and others fretted; O, he had seen that fretting!) Because he knew how very well he could like her, he knew how bitter a taste daily dislike would be. Suppose Lettice some day hinted that charity began at home, and if he would use a little more firmness with patients who didn't pay promptly—well, he had heard that remark from a confrere's wife who once had had a delicate and youth flushed profile. He was thirty-seven, of course——

At twenty-five——

At twenty-five one has a less complicated viewpoint toward life. You think of success as meaning some woman's satisfaction. But at thirty-seven illusion has greatly fallen away from the stark facts of life and success stands on a grimly sensible foundation. And having got to this point several times in his reflections, Stephen Bentlewin shook himself, told himself that he would soon be writing introspective vers libre, and plunged into work at hand.

He denied to himself that Lettice Towne had come to regard him with a fleeting, plaintive wonder in her lovely dark blue eyes. He would not admit to himself that very often he had been greatly tempted to answer that question in a way to satisfy her—and himself for a while at least. He stuck to a slowly formed, austere resolution. Perhaps because in those early childish years Cora Bentlewin had printed austerely on a small, clean, receptive mind. Perhaps he was a little morbid. He deliberately "dropped" Lettice from his thoughts. And then——

AFTERWARD—to be exact, while Lettice Towne's delicate white silk dress was trailing in that clay and her tulle scarf lay tramped in its mire—Stephen Bentlewin tried, and failed, to divide the blame in three equal portions, like thirds of a red apple; himself, accident, and Lettice the sharers.

Accident, Lettice's responsibility, his own negligence——

He had been grossly negligent. Criminally negligent, he could not quite admit; even if he had departed, in silly schoolboylike greed for a holiday, from his long fixed professional habit of keeping in perfect repair and within reach of his own long, supple fingers, his own car or an excellent hired substitute.

In an age when hospitals, factories, offices and apartment buildings, like multiple hives, buzz on and on to ever-widening city boundaries, so that space and time must add and stretch to accommodate the overquota of overburdened centers of living, swift locomotion is often the link between aim and accomplishment. Stephen Bentlewin's car was almost as essential to his days as was his black bag of instruments.

His car was undergoing repair that Saturday afternoon when, just at the close of office hours, Dan Wellman breezed into his private consultation room. Dan was all invitation.

"Come along, Steve. Call it a day. These rains have made the turf springy as a hair mattress. And there'll be creamed home grown peas for dinner."

Every year the Wellmans played at raising their own vegetables on two expensively fertilized acres, with a luxurious twelve room cottage, near the golf links of a far north shore country club.

Stephen Bentlewin accepted the invitation almost without a word. It was welcome.

He had been hard driven for a good many weeks, his night and day calls stepping on each other's heels. More than the usual number of clumsy human bodies had chanced to roll too near a well known unknown brink. Driving through rain slopped streets, gray for a week as coffins themselves, speeding from hospital corridor to corridor, he had planned to snatch some tonic golf at his first sunny free hour. For the sake, indeed, of his patients.

At Dan's imperative invitation he thought of his own car. He seldom rode in another man's. But he saw no great wisdom in waiting an hour or two on repair work. His spare hours were too few, and daylight waits on no mechanic. He saw no good reason for not hopping into Dan's six thousand dollar roadster. Now that it was proffered to him, he felt eager to get at his golf, in a place which he knew would be good and green.

With a good dinner to follow. In winter residence or in summer cottage, the Wellmans had living down to a fine modern art. No Wellman dinner had ever been known to be poor. Whatever the Wellmans' faults, they gave their guests that epicurish feeling which, even though it can be but temporary, frail human guests plaintively yearn for.

a walking encyclopedia. What do you think of it?"

"Nice bit of work for you, George; but if you want my advice, forget it. Remember, he can turn on you and give you ten years, on a whistle. He's got us both; that's just why we were hired. But this hick in the ambassador's suite. . . ."

"Where?"

The Shadow once more recounted the comedy. Bellman roared with laughter.

"Go ahead," said The Shadow, sarcastically; "get the ha-ha off your chest. But watch your step if he comes to interview you. He passed me in the lobby a little while before you came. He had on a dress-suit, and looked as if he had been born to it. Now, when I get into those glad rags, I look like a waiter or a chorusman. But what's the big game? Why the Great Adventure Company?"

"Hanged if I know!" answered Bellman . . . "or care."

AT the time Bancroft entered the theater, Nancy Bowman sat in her dressing-room, waiting for her call. She heard the volley of laughter in reply to some witty—or supposedly witty—lines uttered by the popular light-opera comedian. Ling Foo dozed in her lap, and Nancy was absently drawing her fingers through the double ruff that reached below his shoulders.

"What's the matter with me, Ling Foo? Why should I hate it, when it means bread and butter, clothes and rent all winter? I ought to be grateful for my luck. I wonder how I do it—go out there and dance, and sing, laugh, and make a fool of myself, when all the time my soul is in rebellion?"

How many times had she been tempted to snatch off the comedian's wig and hurl it into the audience! But the reaction to this thought suppressed merriment: for it was easy to create an image of the scene that would naturally follow such an act. She was in luck. The mad adventure of the preceding night had not impaired her voice in the least. But how she hated it—out there!

Ling Foo hated it, too; these wailing sounds that tortured his ears and his stuffy box he had to remain in for three hours every night. He hated leashes and loved park grass, and knew that he had too much of one and not enough of the other; and besides, he was never allowed to bark at home or romp through the halls. It was a hard world for a puppy to live in.

There came a knock on the door. "All ready, Miss Bowman!"

She leashed the dog to the dresser, gave her hair a pat, and went forth to drudgery. The moment she was on the stage, it seemed to her that her soul returned to the dressing-room and left a rollicking automaton down center. Perhaps this very lack of self-consciousness made her the success she was.

NO doubt it may appear incredible that a young woman who had lifted a mediocre part into a New York triumph should not be aware of her success; but nevertheless Nancy was not aware of it in the sense she should have been. The moment she appeared there was but one notion in her head—to do the work she was paid to do, as swiftly and correctly as possible, and hurry home. Her presence was electrical, put a snap into the lines and actions—and all because she was in a hurry to be gone! It is doubtful if she comprehended the nightly ripple of applause as she made her first appearance. All her energies were riveted upon the immediate object of thought—to get through and go home.

All her real ambition was directed toward another goal, and the present, one of those inescapable make-shifts which attack all life lines. Her satisfaction began and ended with the knowledge that the manager liked her work. That she had become part of the town's talk she missed entirely. But it is true that we miss many sounds by attuning the ear to one particular sound. Another girl—with the cynical wisdom of the theater in her veins—would have seized upon this opportunity and become the rage of the town, demanded five hundred a week, maids, motors, and got them; written interviews, had a thousand photos taken, got into advertising pages of the illustrated magazine, the electric signs, and whatnots. Nancy saw only a financial bridge across the winter to spring.

In the wings stood two men, discussing her. They were in evening dress. One was elderly, with an animated Semitic cast of countenance. His companion was in the thirties, with a handsome highbred face, slightly touched with certain marks of dissipation. There was in his blue eyes an expression which, defined, might have said: I have seen everything and found nothing.

"Nineteen thousand last week. For an angel, you're going to do pretty well, Craig."

"It has given me a deal of amusement, Manny, to watch the thing grow. Oh, it's a hit; but that girl out there has turned the trick. Didn't you notice last night that her understudy wasn't received with any particular warmth?"

"Yes. Funny, you never can tell where the lightning is going to strike. Nobody dreamed the part would stand out like this."

"Nobody but this girl would have made it stand out. How much are you giving her?"

"Seventy-five."

"That won't do. Better make it two-fifty."

"Craig, I would if I dared."

"What do you mean by that, Mannheim?"

"She wouldn't understand that it was due to merit. She'd instantly jump to the conclusion that I had ulterior designs. I've been in this business all my life, but I can't make out this one. Never any questions about how her understudy pulled through last night. Any other girl would have been worried stiff. Jenny Malloy brings her to me out of nowhere; and she steps right out of the chorus—into this. Jenny says there never was any affair; so it isn't from being scotched that she is shy. No; I'm afraid to offer it. She might bolt."

Craig made an affirmative gesture. "You've hit it. She doesn't understand me, either; and if I pressed forward, like as not she'd do as you say, bolt."

"Wouldn't that jar you? She can't be made to see that she is the hit of the show. Ever hear of anything like that before in this old town? But she's a good girl, Craig," the manager added, soberly.

"Don't I know it? But she no more belongs in this environment than I do. The stage isn't in her; and I always watch her with the greatest bewilderment. What I mean is, she is without ambition in this line. She sings as if she resented the music, as an educated musician would resent it. And yet, observe her! She is as joyous as thistledown in the wind. Better give her a hundred. Just slip it into her envelope and say nothing."

"I can do that. Has she got you, old-timer?"

"I'm a fool, I suppose; but she has. Yet I've never been able to get her out to tea or dinner or supper. She won't even take my car home, myself out of it."

"Well, it's a safe bet that she rides in nobody else's."

"I wish I knew on which side to take her."

"She may have whiffed your breath, and is afraid of you. Why don't you cut it out?"

"Why should I? It's the only amusement I have left."

"That's bunk. You with all the money in the world and a name as old as the island! Maybe I can help you."

"Don't you meddle, or you'll lose her."

"How bad have you got it?"

"Bad enough to marry her after the performance—if she'd have me. But there you are! I can't tell her that without letting her get acquainted with me; and she's as far off as the Pole."

The manager whistled softly. The woman-hater, eh? Arthur Craig, who went everywhere and with everybody, and all the while just as aloof as this girl was! Funny old burg: it had written down this man as one of its wildest blades; and Craig hadn't kissed a woman since the death of his wife. Excitements; the night life, because it deadened thought; lights and music and forbidden drink because, for a few hours, these served as a barrier to introspective thought. And that girl yonder had put life into his heart again.

"Why don't you enlist Jenny? She's square and a good sport. They live in the same house, and are the best of friends."

"Jenny is on my side, but she hasn't been able to make any headway. That's the devil of it. The girl has built a Chinese wall around herself."

"She won't even take my car home, myself out of it."

"Supposing I drop a hint that you're the silent partner?"

"No. She would begin to distrust you, then. Jenny's going to give a party soon, some night after the show. Coffee and lemonade; and then I'll have a chance to convince Miss Bowman that I'm not as bad as I'm painted. She won't be afraid of me in a room full. If I only knew what her ambition is, I might strike from that direction."

"While there's life there's hope. You gave her that Peke, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, she's keeping it, isn't she?"

"Yes; but I wonder why."

The orchestra crashed the opening bars of the finale; and the two men retired to the stage-office.

IT was a quarter to twelve when Nancy wiped the last vestige of grease-paint from her face. An unusual number of encores had carried the operetta beyond eleven o'clock. She set the dressing table in order and hung up her motley. At least she was thankful to have this room alone to herself; and there were intervals when she could romp with Ling Foo. As she wore the same costume throughout the performance, a maid from the chorus dressing-room gave ten minutes of her time each night during the overture; and that was all the assistance Nancy required.

The innkeeper's daughter—when all her soul cried for the blonde wig of Marguerite! Mediocre music and lyrics so filled with consonants that half the time she had to hiss! Well, it was seventy-five a week, and that meant she could continue her lessons in music and French and Italian and devote hours each day to study. And they wondered why she refused to spend half the night in smoke-laden restaurants; unearthly hours and unhealthy food! She had a goal, and nothing should stand in her way; she would have her good times when that goal was reached. She was but twenty.

As she dressed, her thoughts reverted to the happenings of yesterday. Daddy Bowman was gone; she was all alone. Already she was beginning to dread Thanksgiving and Christmas, though she would be busy enough with two performances; but in the morning and when she returned at night!

She was sorry now that she had not been a little more amiable to that kindly young countryman. No courtier out of a book could have been more courteous. Well, that was life: to come and go and forget. Within a fortnight Daddy Bowman would become a memory and the young man absolutely forgotten.

Always Daddy Bowman had plucked at one string. "Steer clear of men who touch strong drink. They are never to be trusted. Steer clear of men on general principles, but particularly those that drink. Always remember the goal you have set out to reach, and let nothing interfere." She had obeyed those instructions; but in so doing she had been most lonely.

"Come, Ling Foo; it's past our bedtime."

She wrapped the puppy so snugly in his little plaid blanket that only his bright eyes and wet little nose were visible, and started for the door; upon which came a knock, brisk and authoritative. Nancy recognized it, and frowned.

"Come in, Jenny," she called.

The door was flung open, and a handsome, shapely young woman in the middle twenties paused on the threshold. If an artist, in search of a model to pose as Mischief, had come upon Jenny Malloy at this moment, he would have gone no further. There was mischief in the poise of her blonde head; rainy body did not put itself into dry clothing until a gaunt, wet horse had been unharnessed, fed, and bedded in a shed barn.

Suppose Lettice some day hinted that charity began at home, and if he would use a little more firmness with patients who didn't pay promptly—well, he had heard that remark from a confrere's wife who once had had a delicate and [illegible] profile. It was thirty-seven,

An old, rattling buggy and a gaunt horse and a little, bent woman going forth, wind and rain, all seasons of the year, to answer calls.

And Lettice Towne undoubtedly would be one of the smiling, appreciative guests. For all the cold and careful resolution which undermined his feeling for her, the prospect of seeing her was not unpleasant.

Without ado, he accompanied Dan out the door, pausing to give a direction or two to the office girl, then down in an express elevator.

The sun was bright, and just inclining toward descent of day, as they rolled north over the great new bridge and took the lovely skirting road of the lake. The rains just ended had washed the face of the country side, and a brisk wind had combed June grass and trees till their green was sleek and wavy like a woman's well cared for hair. To one who had worked mercilessly hard it was a pleasure to be alive and idle. With the first swift rush of north shore air against his face Stephen shook off some of the accumulated fatigue of weeks.

He shook off more as Dan drove into the low club garage. To the immediate west of the garage the smooth rolling turf had caught something fresher and more emerald than usual from the recent rains. Like a mirroring lake, it allured.

Over it was a scattering of concentrated men and of women in gay sport sweaters and white footgear. Lettice Towne was one of them, in a soft blue silk sweater and flat heeled white shoes which made her seem smaller and younger. For all her modern training, the color rose in her face, too, at sight of Stephen Bentlewin.

He did not see that. It was gone when she greeted him and Dan. And presently she went away to dress for dinner. Stephen, with several other men, played until balls eluded them in the fading daylight. They were a busy office crowd for the most part, and in common took every minute of day-end leisure with greed.

Dan Wellman finally led Stephen off the turf and over to his place. "It's nearly dark, man!"

ALTHOUGH Lettice had merely motored out to the Wellmans for the day, she had had foresight enough to bring along evening wear. In a soft white silk dress, she sat next Stephen Bentlewin at dinner. It was a filmy, delicate silk. Her arms were bare and powdered. Her slippers were satin, and never manufactured for walking purposes. Her stockings were white cobwebs.

Later when the cottageful went across to the clubrooms for the evening dance, she wore a tulle scarf as well. It was silvery tulle, with infinitesimal beads forming a feathery design. Expensive looking, but neither a useful nor a durable article. Merely one of the soft, useless, lovely trifles which civilization exhibits pathetically to mark wistful humanity's rise from savage red and yellow beads.

The iridescent tulle, sheen-like as moonlight, made Lettice Towne's eyes a little lovelier. Stephen Bentlewin knew that his pulses beat faster as he walked from the Wellman place across moon silvered sward at her side. He knew exactly what would have happened had he been twenty-five, instead of thirty-seven.

His pulse was not slow as he and she entered the club doors, lighted and streaming music. He was not a facile dancer. He had learned the art too late in life, with hardly enough zeal. But he knew that he was going through a turn or two with Lettice. That would top a pleasant day. He continued unmoved, however, in some secret recess of his being.

And then, even as she put a hand on his arm and the orchestra finished with the preliminary strumming of a fox-trot, he was summoned to the telephone. The telegram was repeated over the wire to him as it had been received by his office assistant in town:

"Aboard Flyer:

"Hammond Wetties stricken on way home. Immediate operation imperative. Have ambulance meet train 11:30 p. m. You yourself requested to operate. Telegraph reply Flyer, Toledo.

"PHYSICIAN ON TRAIN."

When he had had his assistant in Chicago repeat the telegram and in return had telephoned orders for a reply to be made and the ambulance attended to, the turn of Stephen Bentlewin's heel was professionally eager and obedient. An animation, too, different from that induced by a green turf, had taken possession of his face. That, to correspond, a certain animation had withdrawn from Lettice Towne's face, at his side, is irrelevant to Hammond Wettles' plight.

STEPHEN looked about for Dan Wellman, or a club steward. "Where can I get a taxi, Dan? Or any hired car. No, not yours—at the garage——"

Two or three men, besides his host, were cordially ready to supply Stephen's lack. They pressed forward in a group as they heard. But Lettice Towne, gracefully, deftly, took precedence of all. Smilingly, with a curious little fixed glint in her eyes, she waved them back.

"I'm driving back to town tonight. Truly! I promised to get home. And I can just as well go now. Please!"

Stephen was slightly annoyed. His mind and attention had thrust ahead to Wettles and hospital, and he would have preferred not having any one talk to him on the drive back to town. But one or two men, as well as Dan, instantly fell back, with small, understanding smiles. They had no desire to spoil a pretty woman's game, and possibly Bentlewin's own wish. So Lettice could not gracefully be refused.

"I'd like to start instantly," he said. "And make good time——"

"I'll get my coat in a second. Dan, have the car brought out of the garage, please."

It was ten minutes before she was back in her light silken motor coat, nothing on her head but the silvery tulle scarf. Again a man or two smiled. But undeniably it is a pretty woman's privilege to take advantage of a perfectly good tulle scarf, right at hand, for a long evening drive with the man she——

She was twenty-six. But she could not quite hide the light in her eyes as she got into the car, Stephen following.

She took the wheel. Stephen looked at his watch. About three and a half hours to make some thirty-seven miles. Margin enough, he decided; the roads in and about Chicago are, for the most part, built for speed. At the same time, he wished that he were in his own car, with his hand on his own capable wheel. Jim Towne's purchase was a lower powered make.

However, power has taken on its own relativity of meaning in this speedy, paved age. He smiled to himself, recalling days not long past when all motor speed lay in the womb of the future. For men like Hammond Wettles these were more accommodating days!

Lettice caught the small, fleeting smile. Perhaps she misinterpreted it. She lifted her head happily and shot the car onward.

Five miles, on a superlatively even road, fell away. Five more. The two had not much to say, although Lettice Towne's silence may have been happily expectant. A silence can be that. But Stephen Bentlewin was not in the mood for chatter, and she fell in with his desire.

Perhaps she slowed down somewhat the next five miles. The speedometer responded to Stephen Bentlewin's glance toward it, however, and Lettice colored.

But she was honestly uncertain when presently she came to stop at crossroads. "There's a slip closed for repairs, Dan said. It was open early this morning. I suppose you noticed which detour Dan took on the way out?"

He was all alertness. He had not noticed—Dan might have detoured half a dozen times while he was fatuously admiring the rain freshened folinge of the trees. Now, as if the thought had leaped from Lettice's mind to his own, he recalled the recent heavy rains.

"Personally, I don't drive this way often enough to know it well," he said, with a decided touch of uneasiness or of impatience.

"To the left we'll get a mile or two of unpaved way," she said, meditatively. "But the right turn means a detour of six or seven miles."

He looked at his watch. It was Lettice who, flushing as if she suspected blame for herself in his attitude, took the initiative and shot the car toward the left road.

So that, three-quarters of a mile farther, it plowed heavily, impetuously, into a rain soaked bed of clay and came to a disconcerting halt.

"O!" exclaimed Lettice in horror. Stephen made no exclamation, but reached to take the wheel from her. Presently he grimly took his hand off it. No reverse clutch had sufficed. "We're stuck," he said, laconically. "We'll have to be towed out."

She exclaimed that they had passed the last lighted place two or three miles back. The surrounding country showed not a blink of house or barn light. "Whatever distance it is, we'll have to get help," he said, still laconically, and was striding off.

"Try again to force the car on," she begged.

He got in, tried, failed. An engine sputtered, snorted, puffed futilely. "Chassis is too heavy for the motor," he commented briefly. "I suppose you'd not care to stay behind. But I'm a fast walker."

"We may meet another motorist."

"We may," he said doubtfully. "But, come to think, we haven't passed many in the last few miles. Perhaps they've been warned off the route." He strode off. A mile back a window showed down a side road.

They roused a sleepy truck raiser. But he declined to bring his horses to pull a car from clay, and he declined to let them take his horses or his flivver to complete their journey.

"I'm a doctor," began Stephen, entreating. "I've got to get to town——"

"That's what they all say," grunted a sleepy man, and closed his front door. "Three miles west, Tony Perica might listen. Then, again, he might be drunk," was called from a window.

"Can we use your telephone to——"

"Out of order! Rains washed out something."

Three miles is not a long distance—given the right margin of time. Given the wrong margin——

LETTICE TOWNE caught her breath till it was short and frightened in sound. She and Stephen Bentlewin faced each other in common incredulity. It seemed quite impossible that this could happen—that they could be so near and yet so far from all the aids and demands of their times!

Rather blindly, Lettice turned and retraced her steps in the direction of the car. She walked fast. As though at an absolute loss to think of any way of getting assistance that would be expeditious enough, Stephen followed her silently, scanning the road in front and behind him for any gleam of other headlights. There came no gleam.

"Is there any interurban car in this part of the country?" he curtly asked Lettice once.

"None. Several miles from here——"

"Ah! Several miles!"

They reached the car again. He tried again, scowling, to force an engine to effective action. Four great wheels remained fast—held in the wet clay.

There must have been an eloquent expression on Stephen's face when presently he desisted and looked at Lettice, remaining stoically on the ground beside, her satin slippers wet and muddy from the mile and return walk.

Scarlet burned out bright on both her delicate cheeks. "I'm sorry," she stammered. "I wish I'd let Dan drive you in. I'm——"

"It can't be helped," he said politely. "Just bad luck, that's all."

"You'll always blame me!"

"Not at all," he said, too politely.

"Perhaps Mr. Wettles can wait till morning."

"He'll be a dead man in the morning."

Desperately: "Aren't there other surgeons at the hospital who——"

"Plenty. But I'm afraid"—a voice could not keep down bitter apprehension—"he'll be boneheaded enough to wait for me, minute after minute, which won't help his temperature."

HE stared down grimly at the big motionless wheels, so competent but so useless now. The hubs might have leered at him above the clay which held the tires and lower spokes. It is the irony of modern inventions that at times they can so stubbornly display their limitations.

Lettice gave another very short, frightened breath, and her two white, ungloved hands clenched at her sides.

Stephen Bentlewin's expression was forbidding, although it was more concerned with Hammond Wettles than with her. To the woman, however, who had hoped——

Again a short breath of fright. But her own two hands, clenched, must have given her desperate inspiration.

"If—if the wheels won't leave the clay," she said, a little wildly, "perhaps the clay will consent to leave the wheels." And, saying this, she dropped to her knees, regardless of her white silk dress, and began fiercely to pull the clay with her hands from a tire and the lower part of a hub. She flung her handfuls to the side of the road.

"Lettice!"

"It's the only way!"

"This is preposterous! In the first place, it would take us hours——"

"I'll see!" One end of her tulle scarf fell in front of her. With a soiled hand she flung it back. "A clay bed five feet by, say, ten by eighteen inches deep—we'll hope it's no deeper—at the rate of two full handfuls a second——"

"Lettice! Get up! I insist! Look at your gown, your scarf!" He was thoroughly angry, as at a silly and hysterical child. He took hold of her——

She wrenched from his hold. "No!" Two

a walking encyclopedia. What do you think of it?"

"Nice bit of work for you, George; but if you want my advice, forget it. Remember, he can turn on you and give you ten years, on a whistle. He's got us both; that's just why we were hired. But this hick in the ambassador's suite. . . ."

In the wings stood two men, discussing her. They were in evening dress. One was elderly, with an animated Semitic cast of countenance. His companion was in the thirties, with a handsome highbred face, slightly touched with certain marks of dissipation. There was in his blue eyes an expression which, defined, might have said: I have seen everything and found nothing.

"She won't even take my car home, myself out of it."

The World Outside by Harold MacGrath

Blue Ribbon Fiction

THE STORY THUS FAR.

An adventure for $10,000—this is the bizarre offer made to Collingswood Jeremiah Bancroft, who has just inherited his father's $7,000,000, by a stranger who says he represents the Great Adventure company, and who is tossed into Jerry's ramshackle dwelling by a terrific storm. Jerry, sitting among his curios and the 1,200 books he is reading, at first scoffs and then ponders, recalling his father's mysterious death and his own uneventful 24 years. He fails to note the malevolent looks that the stranger darts at him. The man explains that he has sold many successful adventures and that Jerry's is to begin at once, provided he signs a contract to go into the great world outside and meet it. Jerry is pondering over a memorandum in his father's effects—"Paid Kennedy in full"—when the bell rings—and out of the storm comes a girl, rain drenched and in distress. It appears she is an actress; her car has broken down; she has walked five miles. Jerry escorts her on a drive to the nearest railroad station for New York, and later himself goes to New York with his battered old suitcase. On the way he determines to pay off a church mortgage if the church will permit a memorial window to his father, and to give $50,000 each to his three friends, Mrs. Horne, the housekeeper, Prof. Miller of the academy, and faded Miss Hewitt, the church organist. He is followed by an agent of the seller of adventures, known as The Shadow. Meantime the girl is musing about him, about the fact that neither knows the other's address, and about her own precarious future. It develops she is a waif, reared by an enigmatic old man, Daddy Bowman.

FOURTH INSTALLMENT.
The Girl on the Billboard.

"A ROOM with bath, please," said Bancroft, adding a smile to his pleasantly modulated voice.

One glance was enough for the clerk. The intelligent face, brown and clean, the clear gray eyes, meant nothing, carried no message. In the great hostelries of New York, clothes alone make the man. That derby!

"Sorry——"

"Just a moment," interrupted Bancroft, still smiling. "My hat and clothes are the fortunes of war. I cannot go roving about the streets in this attire; Chaplin is too well known. I want a room and bath; if you haven't that, a whole floor."

There was a simple and dignified way out for the clerk. He could have asked if reservation had been made, and, on being informed to the contrary, announced that there was no hope. Instead, he believed he might very well have a little joke to recount later, to lighten the tedium.

"There is nothing left but the ambassador's suite, sir. I can give you that."

"Very well," said Bancroft, who hadn't the least idea what the ambassador's suite signified, socially or financially. He extracted his packet of bills, so respectable in thickness and so formidable in numerals that the clerk was rendered speechless. "How much will it be?" asked the victim.

The clerk, finding himself hoist on his own petard, named the extortion. Bancroft counted off the sum, then signed the register. He had come through; but he never realised that the victory had been due not to his personal magnetism but to the strength of his wallet.

The change on the clerk's face—from hauteur to astonishment—was carefully noted by the bell-boy, who darted toward the recent object of his contempt. When he took the key, which he recognized, his eyes popped. He knew instantly that here was a British duke who had either gone into the movies or was the victim of a hold-up.

"This way to the lift, sir!"

The suite appalled Bancroft. Mirrors and gilt and plush and mahogany; oriental rugs and tapestries, paintings—and bedroom after bedroom, bath after bath, comparing favorably with some palace he had seen in the home picture-books. Tom Canty. Bancroft had always wondered about that boy's sensations where the ermine had been thrown across his shoulders; he had some glimmer now.

His ready laughter broke out. His sense of humor was well developed, and had, in fact, served to keep him on the optimistic side of the fence, despite the periods of depressing unhappiness. A good start: to storm New York in this fashion, and to squeeze a laugh out of it. The Great Adventure company couldn't have done anything better than this. That bed there, with its sultanic splendor, was almost immoral. Having satisfied his curiosity, he searched the walls for the bells and rang for the valet.

"I want evening clothes, with short coat, a fifteen collar, shoes six and a half, and a brown or gray fedora, size seven; also a dark gray business suit for morning."

"Yes, sir. You'll be wanting a top-coat, too, sir," said the valet respectfully. A man, wearing the habiliments of the ragpicker, would have been treated respectfully—in these hallowed confines.

At half after eight he reëntered the lobby and went to the desk, with the intention of depositing the bulk of his money. His appearance—the ease with which he wore his borrowed plumes—completed the demoralization of the clerk.

HAVING deposited his money and received his receipt, Bancroft sallied forth for his first lecture in the University of Streets. He wandered west, peered into shop-windows, glanced curiously at the men and women who passed him, stared at the automobiles and philosophized upon the evolution of the wheel; crossed Fifth Avenue and paused to admire the colossal beauty of the public library. Here would be a great place to browse in, once he became domiciled. He came presently to the most famous intersection of streets in the western hemisphere—Forty-second and Broadway—where the huge animated electric signs flashed into his astonished eyes.

For an hour he meandered about this brilliant section, in and out of cross-streets, stopping before theater entrances and inspecting the framed photographs, and occasionally recognizing a face. And then the most marvelous thing in the world happened. Her face!—the unknown girl of the storm! Nancy Bowman. He approached the box-office window and laid down a bill.

"Standing room only," said the quiescent humorist behind the grille.

"That'll do for tonight."

Bancroft was tremendously excited, but he was in no hurry. He had, by some extraordinary miracle, discovered her; that would be enough for the present. He knew where she would be for days and days to come. Later, he would find a way to her. He had his passport properly viséed: the reclamation of old Mrs. Horne's shoes and stockings.

With a ringing in his ears and a sting in his blood, he entered the darkened house.

TO return to The Shadow. As Bancroft disappeared into the elevator, The Shadow went up to the desk and glanced at the register sheet. J. Collingswood, New York. He turned away and passed out of the lobby, into the street, utterly dumfounded with what he had seen and heard.

"The Shadow. Very important news."

"Get a taxi and come down," was the order; which was obeyed.

As The Shadow entered the apartment, the Professor tossed his Walter Pater on the reading table and nodded toward a chair.

"Well, what is the excitement?"

"He came to town tonight."

"I hadn't expected him so soon. Tied up for the night?"

"Yes, sir. I'm afraid you've doped him out wrong"; and the The Shadow recounted the scene in the hotel.

"Shadow, as a trailer you rival the Sioux; but don't try to think. That's my business. The boy is doing exactly as I intended; only I had given him a month to decide in. For a boy, brought up in a country village, he's an eccentric. What I mean is, he is not what he should be, not what fate no doubt originally intended. An old village schoolmaster and an unusual library have turned him into the best read young man I ever met. Reads Horace in the original, and doesn't agree with Pater here that mountains are ugly rather than beautiful. But he's young and curious. Why did he put up at this particular hotel? Because George Bellman is living there. He is walking straight into the web. He'll be interviewing Bellman in a day or two; and George will bamboozle him. Then what? Why, our country cousin will seek obscure lodgings and investigate the city, visit the library, the Metropolitan and the Bronx. He will spend very little money on himself."

"He put a dent in his roll tonight. The ambassador's suite!"

"Youthful humor. That will be the most dangerous side of him—his sense of humor. He understands a joke just as if he had read Punch all his life."

"Punch? But what if he settles down?"

"Remember, the thinking is my part. Bancroft will come to me eventually. He'll buy an adventure, but only to learn what the devil I'm up to."

"Well, if he actually finds out," said The Shadow, with a doleful wag of the head, "he'll have the edge on George and me."

A mocking light flashed into the Professor's eyes. He rose and began to pace the room. After a few minutes he paused before his visitor.

"You are two crooks, but you've been clever enough to keep your mugs and fingertips out of the files; and that is the reason you are working for me. The man who recommended you told me you always kept your mouths shut, and I have found that you two can. I am hiring you to perform certain services, perfectly honest. It is no crime to watch a man, which is your part. It is no crime to tell a fairy-story, which is George's part. When the time comes, you and George will go your ways with honest money in your pockets. Perhaps the first honest money you have ever earned. It will be a novelty, that's all. You'll spend it without looking over your shoulders. But if you are wise," the speaker said somberly, "you'll use your wages as a basis for an honest life. A cigar-shop, a pool-room, would fit you nicely. George is a born salesman. He would sell honest stocks with the same address and facility that he uses to sell the worthless. My advice is, then, play it straight."

"And how about you?"—cynically.

"Shadow, I have been an honest man all my life," said the Professor, gravely.

"What? How about this country boob?"

"Well, what about him?"

"You're going to rob him, aren't you?"

"Am I?"

The Shadow threw up his hands. "I pass!"

"I do not ask you to believe I'm honest. I simply make the statement. But you are dangerously near to thinking for yourself; so I'll remind you. I hold you two in the palm of this hand." The long bony hand closed suggestively. "A false move, too much curiosity, and I'll turn you over without the least compunction. You understand?"

"Yes, sir," said The Shadow, back to his level.

"Well, then, don't waste any time in the future trying to shadow me. Understand, I don't say you must not; I say, don't waste your time. Now"—briskly—"return to the hotel and tell George it is my order that he shall give you his lounge for the night. Describe Bancroft minutely; and don't forget the brains. George is the most plausible and consistent liar I ever knew; but this time he must watch his step. Leave a call for five in the morning, and be in the lobby when Bancroft comes down; for the boy is in the habit of rising at cockcrow. Hang on to his heels until he settles somewhere definitely, then report at the office. Toddle." The Professor reached for his battered Pater, signifying that the interview was at an end.

THE Shadow departed, filled with those apprehensive emotions which always assailed him in the presence of this queer old duck, with his handsome face and his smileless mouth. That was it: the Professor never smiled. His laughter was ready enough, but there was never any smile. So he had tumbled to the shadowing? A bad sign. He recalled the first meeting.

"What shall we call you?"

"Call me the Professor."

And yet there was his name—Daniel Stewart—on the door of the Bolivian Emerald company, that had a real mine and sold real emeralds. Fog.

The Shadow had to wait until after midnight, in the hotel lobby, for the return of his more distinguished confederate. In the meantime he witnessed Bancroft's return in evening clothes. The fog doubled in density.

"I might as well be in the middle of the Atlantic," he mused. "I'll bet he never had a soup-to-nuts on before, and pipe him! Why, he's a dead ringer for John Barrymore. The Professor can talk, but this boy has something under his lid. He didn't have to come in that hick rig, with that roped suitcase. All right! it's five thousand, clean money. I should worry."

Bellman welcomed The Shadow effusively.

"Come along up to the room."

"That's where I'm going. The Professor wants me to snooze on your lounge for the night. Bancroft arrived."

"As soon as this, eh? But wait until we're in the room." Once there, Bellman asked for the news and received it. "Shadow, old top, it's the Professor's game. He knows what he's doing; we don't. It will pay us in the end to work in the dark. We don't know what the scenario's about; all we have to do is to pose as he directs. But I've got one whale of a thunderbolt for you."

"Shoot it."

"Well, I don't like mysteries; so I've done a little sleuthing. Our boss spent fourteen years up the River."

"For the love o' Mike! For what?"

"Manslaughter. Killed a policeman in a row. Knocked the bull over into an areaway and the bull's conk split. Same name he has today—Daniel Stewart. The newspaper files of the time reported the case in a few lines. There was nothing about the trial. Wore a beard and was deeply tanned, as if he had been at sea. In this burg manslaughter isn't much-a-much unless you're somebody. Well, Daniel was apparently nobody; so they put him on the north-bound in jig-time. But behind the hour of the deed—blank as your palm. Nothing as to where he came from, who his people were, and all that. This got me digging into old city directories and telephone books. No Daniel Stewart in either, of that year. What's the answer? Why, he kept his real name doggo. Nobody recognized him on account of his whiskers."

"Manslaughter! . . . And always hunting for the face of some woman! But why all this energy?"

"Poor child! After we have his iron boys in our jeans, we can add to it from time to time."

"None of that in mine, bo; not in mine!" said The Shadow, resolutely. "Have you ever had this guy look at you?"

"How do you mean?"

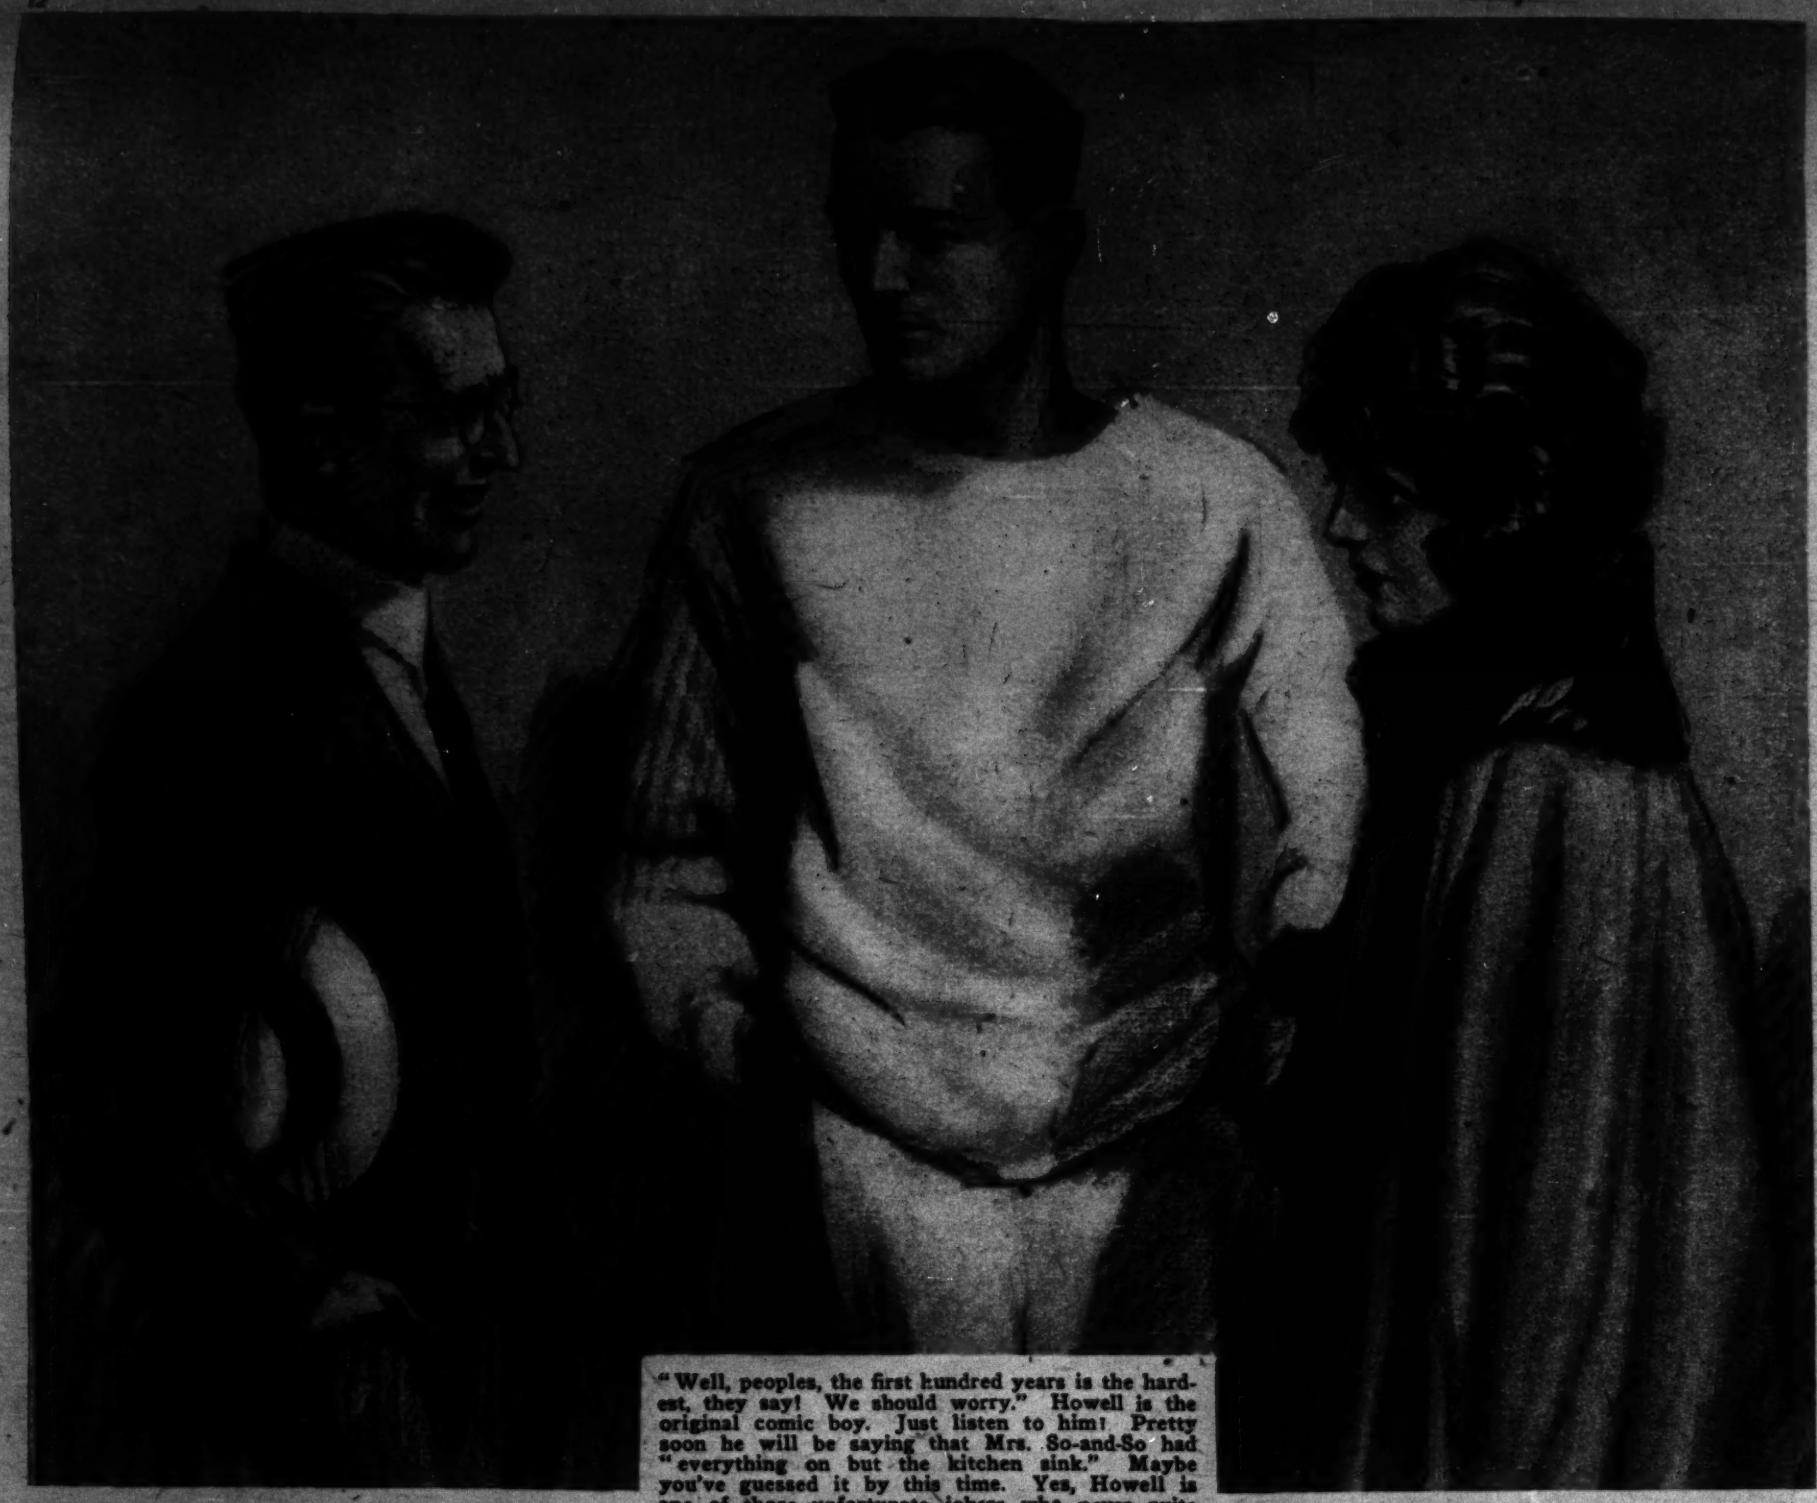
"When you do something he doesn't like. Ever have ice slipped down your back? That's what I mean. I'm going to take his coin when the time comes, and fade."

"Suit yourself."

"That's me, Georgie! But manslaughter! How did it happen?"

"Tried to get into a house where there was an auction going on. Seemed to go berserker; pulled people right and left and knocked over a woman. The bull jumped him and hauled him into the street. A minute later it was all over; and the Professor was on his way to the Tombs. Then he became the great-grandfather of all clams. But the man in the adjoining cell said he heard the Professor sobbing all through the night. He got his monicker up there because he was

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER



"Well, peoples, the first hundred years is the hardest, they say! We should worry." Howell is the original comic boy. Just listen to him! Pretty soon he will be saying that Mrs. So-and-So had "everything on but the kitchen sink." Maybe you've guessed it by this time. Yes, Howell is one of those unfortunate jokers who never quite catch up with the current gibe and gest. Two years from now Howell will probably be talking on "Mad Money" and "Finale Hopper."

Say what you will, there's no enjoyment like the enjoyment of the man who gets the point of the funny yarn a little bit late. You will see him giggling to himself all the way home.

Aren't you sorry for the young man with the bald spot and the bottle of tonic? His friends say it's too late to do anything about it, but the barber who sold him the tonic allows that it's better late than never. See how energetically he rubs! It looks to us as though he might rub off what hair he still has!

The man who never thinks of the snappy comeback in time has a hard life. He's always figuring out what he should have said to Mrs. Ronnells, provided, etc., etc.

know. I was hit myself a few minutes later."

"But when? When was this?" persisted my mistress, "Why have I never heard of it?"

"It was the night he joined his old outfit, our outfit," the man explained. "As soon as he delivered his new men, he was allowed to come up with us, and he got his the very first night he was on duty. I was standing right by his elbow. You knew him, I take it."

"Yes," answered my lady in a strange, choked voice, "I knew him, all right. I was going to marry him."

She stood staring straight ahead of her for a moment, while the boys shuffled their feet and looked at the floor in mute sympathy. Then she turned away without another word and hastened from the room.

IN the sad days which followed I know she must have made every effort possible to find out what had become of the man she loved, but the mails were hopelessly uncertain just then and company records are of necessity incomplete when active fighting is going on.

"Poor kid, she's taking it hard," said the artillery officer to the two motor corps men one day a couple of weeks later. "Wish I could help her, but I've written to every one I can locate and not a damn one of them knows what's become of him."

By this time every one around the place knew what had happened and they all sympathized with my lady so deeply that when, one memorable day, the artillery officer rolled his chair excitedly into the library and announced "She's found him!" everybody seemed to know immediately what he meant. They crowded around him to get the particulars.

"He's right up there in her own ward; came in last night and was lying in the first bed she stopped at when she came on duty this morning," related the officer. "My bed is right alongside of it, but I hadn't sat up yet and wasn't paying any attention to who was there until I heard her draw in her breath sharp and sudden, as if she'd hurt herself. I turned my head then and, boys, I'm here to say I came damn near crying when I saw the look on her face. He was still asleep and she didn't waken him, though I knew she was dying to. She just stood there leaning over him with her hands clasped tight in front of her, and the tears trickling off her cheeks onto his blanket."

"But what's the matter with him?—What shape is he in?—How bad was he hit?" several listeners clamored.

The artilleryman's face darkened. "That's the tough part of it," he replied. "He's not right in his head, somehow. The wound has healed up nice enough but he hasn't got over the shock of it. The head nurse read me the history of his case that was sent on from the hospital he's been in, and it seems he never speaks and doesn't appear to know where he is or what's going on."

This report turned out to be only too pitifully accurate. Capt. Warner was soon strong enough to sit up in bed, I heard, and even to be taken for brief excursions around the ward in a wheel chair, but he still continued to contemplate the world about him with blank indifference. My mistress seemed to fascinate him, they said, and he would follow her with his eyes as a baby might watch a butterfly hovering about a rose bush, but neither the sight of her wistful face nor the sound of her gentle voice was able to penetrate the haze which hung over his brain.

No man ever received better nursing, you may be sure of that, and every medical officer on the staff was deeply interested in the case. Singularly enough, they all agreed in the belief that Captain Warner's condition was not hopeless, yet none of them seemed able to put a finger on the precise treatment which might stimulate his mind to resume its normal functions. At last a wise old specialist who happened to be in Paris for a few days was brought out to the hospital by the medical officer in charge. He was a Scotchman, trained in Edinburgh, and he had been treating cases of shell-shock among the British forces ever since the beginning of the war.

It chanced that my mistress had wheeled Capt. Warner down to the library that day, for the first time since his arrival, and it was here that the old Scotch doctor was brought to examine him.

"A fine, hearty lad," he remarked to the C. O., at the close of the examination, "and is this the lassie?" he added, glancing over his spectacles at my mistress. It was evident that the romantic phase of the case had not been omitted from the C. O.'s account.

"Yes, this is Miss Blair," he was informed, "perhaps she can give you some additional data."

"Aye, perhaps she can," agreed the specialist. So Patsy told him everything she could think of which might have a bearing on the case, even relating how she first heard that the captain was wounded. To her surprise he seized upon this incident

"He was singing that same song when the shell struck him?" he asked.

"So his friend says," she replied.

"And the record—have ye got the record?" he wanted to know.

"Yes, it's in my trunk," she answered.

The C. O. looked at her reproachfully. "You told me it was broken," he said.

"I couldn't bear to hear it any more," confessed Patsy, "I—I thought he had forgotten me—and it brought back too many memories."

"Quite so," smiled the old Scot, giving her a fatherly pat on the shoulder, "and I think I've hit upon what we're searching for, doctor. Will you fetch us that record, miss? We'll just try a bit of an experiment." As she left the room he added to the C. O., "Mind ye, this may not work. And yet again, it may. It's the trifles that turn the trick, oftimes—the veriest trifles."

THE C. O. cleared the room of all the other patients, and when my lady returned they wheeled Capt. Warner up close to where I stood on the end of the long table. I wasn't aware that this was the supreme moment of my existence, but I did feel that something vastly important hung upon my performance and I cursed the infirmity which made it necessary for my mistress to crank me all through the selection. She did it bravely and steadily, I must say, though her hand trembled a bit, just as it had that night on shipboard.

Capt. Warner watched our preliminary preparations with the same childlike apathy which had marked his behaviour ever since he came to the hospital, his eyes for the most part fixed on Patsy as if he could never get enough of looking at her. But as the words of the song struck upon his ears his gaze shifted to me and an odd, puzzled expression came over his face. He remained thus, listening intently, throughout the whole of the first two verses and their intervening chorus. Then, as the first clear, high note of the second refrain rang through the room, an agonized knitting of his brows took place and he closed his eyes as if in great pain.

His head bent slowly backward until it touched the chair and his hands clutched at the blanket over his knees 'til I thought they would tear it in two. His mouth began working in a convulsive effort to speak, and with that my mistress forsook her post and ran to his side. At last the lips parted and from the depths of his heart came the name which had always been foremost there. "Patsy," he breathed, "Patsy!"

"I'm here, dear; right here!" she cried softly, laying her hands on his shoulder. "Open your eyes, Steve; open your eyes, dear, and look at me."

As if he were coming back from another world, he obeyed the command and beheld there before him the one face he would have chosen above all others to greet him. He started to smile, started to raise his arms to her, started to rise from his seat, but weakness intervened, and he lapsed quietly into unconsciousness.

"Get him to bed quickly," commanded the old doctor, with a greater display of excitement than he had shown at any time up to that moment, "if I'm no deceiver the laddie will wake up in his proper senses."

My lady grabbed his hands and kissed them fervently, not saying a word. Then she turned her attention swiftly to the silent figure in the chair.

As for me, of course I petered out and never did finish the second chorus, but that was a matter of little consequence, for the result had been accomplished by that time and nobody was paying any attention to me anyhow. My reward came after we all got back home again and my mistress and Mr. Stephen began fitting up their little home. I had been knocked about by that time until I was a decrepit, woeful looking object. My springs had become utterly useless and my gears were a mess of junk, but my turntable was still working and my voice was in better condition than ever, so one day about a month before the wedding Mr. Stephen sneaked me out of the back hall without letting my mistress know anything about it and took me down town with him.

There I was installed in the stunning old cabinet I now occupy—a "Charles the Second credence," the antiquaire called it—and was equipped with a pert little electric motor to keep me going in my old age. Mr. Stephen gave me to Miss Patsy as one of her wedding presents and down in her heart I think there was nothing else she got which meant quite so much to her.

DINNER

back to the kitchen, out of the kitchen door with the big platter in her hand, across the lawn to the Philbrook house. How big the house looked—yet it wasn't as big as her home in Westville—and forbidding. In Westville she had been "Miss Eleanor Parker, the beautiful daughter of Horace J. Parker," and got articles about her parties in the papers. Here she was—nobody, going to the Philbrooks—about a stolen chicken.

She mounted the front steps. There were lights in the living room. What if they had company—what if——

She had to go ahead. It was the least she could do—to make up for things. She knew that. She clutched her purse and the platter. She rang the bell.

SOME one was walking inside. The door opened. Mr. Philbrook himself stood at the door. Norrie had difficulty in catching her breath.

"Please," she began, "I'd like—to—to——"

Philbrook looked rather quizzically under the hall light. The wrinkle between his brows looked deeper than she had thought it. How stern he looked.

"I'm Mrs. Burnham, your—your new neighbor," she started bravely again.

"Yes?" encouraged Philbrook.

"And, and if Mrs. Philbrook—it's about a chicken—your chicken for dinner. We—we—took it."

Philbrook looked stern and a trifle more puzzled, if possible.

"Won't you come in?" he said.

Norrie went into the living room. What a nice living room it was, tan and green, with touches of blue. She got that impression in spite of her fright. Mrs. Philbrook was seated in a big chair near the window. She had been reading. No one else was there. That was something.

"Our neighbor, Mrs. Burnham, has some news for you," Mr. Philbrook said by way of introduction. Norrie stood there, hesitatingly, looking at the older woman. For an instant her mind went back to Westville again. There she knew people—had friends—here, she—stole chickens—what a disgrace—if they wouldn't let her pay, would arrest her or something——

"Won't you sit down," asked Mrs. Philbrook, coolly polite.

Norrie sat down in one of the comfortable chairs. Then she held out the platter.

"This is yours," she said. Then, "We—I—took—stole—your chicken. We ate it for dinner. My husband doesn't know about it. I'll tell him later—but he hasn't anything to do with it. It was—that is, I had it stolen for me. I knew it was yours when we ate it."

"What does she mean?" asked Philbrook, his voice still cool, perplexed.

"Just what do you mean?" asked Mrs. Philbrook.

Norrie started in all over again. Mrs. Philbrook knew that a chicken had been stolen. The cook had told her, but she thought it had been taken from the ice box on the porch, before cooking. There had been cold corn beef for dinner that night at Philbrooks'.

"Do you mean to say," asked Mrs. Philbrook, "that you came over here yourself and took the chicken out of my oven?"

"It was—no, I didn't take it. It was taken—for me. But I knew it was yours when I ate it, so it was just the same. Dan took it—a colored man who works for me—he was a friend of mine—I knew his mother at home. You see, I was going to have company for dinner—I've never had company before——"

Norrie was dreadfully ashamed. The next thing she knew she was crying.

"You see, my first guest—and the meat didn't come and I didn't know any one to ask for anything—and when Dan came——"

She told them the whole story. She wiped her eyes, tried to be brave about it.

"Of course I'll be awfully glad if you won't have me arrested—if you'll let me pay for it—let it go that way. I don't think I'll—do anything like this again. I don't know how much chickens are, all roasted. I'm learning to cook—but I never knew how to cook a chicken, so I never bought one. If you'll let it be settled that way——"

She opened her purse—she had household money in it and the money for Fred's birthday present. This was dreadful, begging not to be arrested—she, Horace Parker's daughter—Fred Burnham's wife. Still, she had let Dan go out and steal—had eaten the chicken. If only——

SHE looked at Mrs. Philbrook. There was a different expression on her face. She was looking in the direction of Mr. Philbrook. And Mr. Philbrook had picked up a newspaper and was holding it up in front of him—and behind it he was making peculiar noises. Was he that angry? How stern he had looked when she came in.

The noises behind the newspaper grew louder. The paper dropped. Mr. Philbrook was roaring with laughter! Was he cruel enough to laugh—would he make a joke of her—a thief—before every one in Morrilton. If only——

"Why, why," exploded Philbrook, "that's the funniest thing I ever heard, the very funniest. Imagine—the colored fellow coming in here—and taking our chicken—hot out of the oven—and saving the dinner party. And you ate it?"

Norrie smiled in spite of herself. Here she was—a confessed thief—smiling.

"Yes and I knew it was stolen. But, somehow, I didn't start worrying so terribly until after dinner. It was an awfully good chicken."

Then she remembered and looked at Mrs. Philbrook. Why had she spoken so frivolously?

But Mrs. Philbrook was smiling, too.

"I'm glad we could be of service, I'm sure," she said, but her intonations were kinder than her words and her eyes twinkled. She came over and stood by Norrie's chair.

"You poor child," she said, "don't worry about the chicken any more. We'll forget it ever happened. I didn't realize how lonely a little bride could get. We older people get selfish and take it for granted that new people have their own friends. You don't know any one in town, you said?"

"No one but my husband—and Dan, the colored boy who stole the chicken, and he's going home tonight."

"Perhaps there are other people in Morrilton who can make up for Dan," Mrs. Philbrook smiled, but her eyes glittered as if she were, for some odd reason, near tears.

"I'm awfully ashamed—and grateful," said Norrie; "now I've got to tell my husband."

She rose and put the platter on the table. Mrs. Philbrook rose, too, and as Norrie walked toward the door put her hand on Norrie's shoulder and walked with her.

"What are you going to tell him?" she asked.

"Every bit of it. I'd never be able to sleep if I didn't. He's so—so upright and honorable. I can't imagine what he'll say."

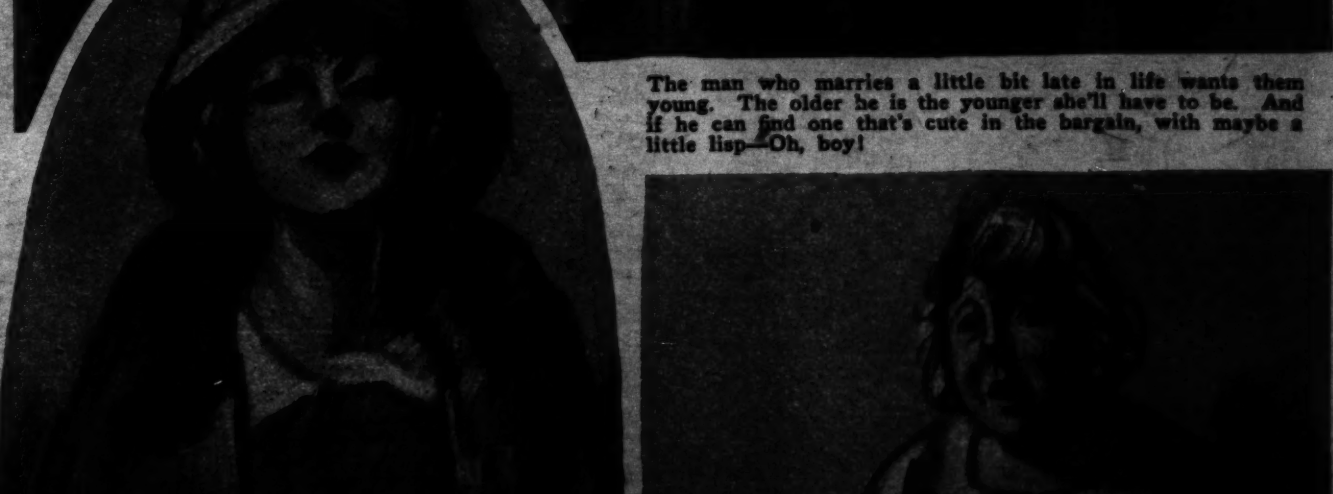
"I'll tell you," said Philbrook, and Mrs. Philbrook nooded in agreement. "My wife and I will walk over with you. Rather late for a first call—but as long as you've broken the ice and started a precedent—— Maybe if we are with you it won't be so hard to explain."

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER

By W. E. HILL.

Copyright: 1922: by The Chicago Tribune.

Cousin Delight Bascomb is awfully conservative, so to speak, about dress. Style may not get to her until it ceases to be style, but, on the other hand, why take up anything until time has proved its worth? For instance, if five or six years from now bobbed hair stands the test, Cousin Delight will, maybe, bob her hair.



The man who marries a little bit late in life wants them young. The older he is the younger she'll have to be. And if he can find one that's cute in the bargain, with maybe a little lisp—Oh, boy!

"What was that? What was that she said to the little fella?" Something really ought to be done about the man who sits next at the musical show and is just a little late on getting the jokes. They have to sink in gradually—but, oh, so gradually, and unless frowned on heavily he'll expect you to help.

Some people have a sixth sense for being late. Especially when it comes to meeting a friend at lunch time. Anette is like that. On time means nothing in her gay young life—if she gets there some time during the twenty-four hours, well and good. But if you dare to be late when meeting Anette! Oh, gee! Oh, gosh!

Bridgie never gets the tunes until a year or so after they have ceased to be very popular, and then she gets them hard. You'd think her little throat would burst. This morning she's cleaning the insides out of a broiler and taking "The Love Nest" on high.

swer, but I could see that both of them were doing some serious thinking. When it came time to go below Captain Warner took charge of me in a manner that straightway discouraged any other possible volunteers, and we followed my mistress down to the stateroom. After assuring herself that her traveling companions had not come down yet, she pointed out my corner to him and permitted him to come in and place me there. Then he straightened up and they faced each other.

"Thank you, captain," said she, glancing significantly toward the door. "I shall see you again, I hope?"

The young man appeared acutely miserable. "Aw, Patsy, don't act like a stranger," he implored; "anything but that. If you can't forgive me, for heaven's sake say so and I'll keep out of your way, but don't treat me like a chance acquaintance."

"We can't discuss the matter here," she answered firmly; "the other girls will be down any minute. They mustn't find you in the room."

Captain Warner promptly backed into the little corridor and stood leaning against the side of the door.

"There won't be any scandal if I stand out here, will there?" he grinned.

"Possibly not," said Patsy; "but I don't see what good it's going to do."

"It does me a heap of good just to look at you," he asserted.

Patsy sniffed.

"Too bad you didn't feel that way the night of your lovely poker game down at the club," she reminded him.

"Surely I've served my sentence for that by this time," he protested. "That was six months ago. Aren't you ever going to forget it?"

"Never," she declared. "No man who gets so absorbed in a gambling game that he forgets he is supposed to take me to a party can ever expect me to forget he forgot me. I had on my nicest frock and my pretty new slippers and everything, and you let me sit there at home all evening long like a poor ninnyhammer, without so much as telephoning."

"I know—it was unpardonable," admitted Captain Warner, hanging his head, "but it taught me a lesson, Patsy. I——"

"I hate you for spying on me like that."

"IF you had only been gracious enough to lie about it," my mistress continued warmly, her wrongs bubbling up afresh within her as she rehearsed them; "if you had called me up the next day and told me your motor boat had broken down out in the sound; if you had said a holdup man had knocked you unconscious in the park; anything like that—anything, I might have chosen to overlook it, even though I suspected you were fibbing. But to come out with the humiliating truth about the matter—do you think any girl could ever forget that?"

She was fumbling for her handkerchief now, and the big fellow in the doorway was looking painfully uncomfortable.

"But you sent the ring back without ever giving me a chance to talk to you," he argued, feebly. "Was that fair?"

"There was nothing to talk about," she retorted. "If gambling could keep you from me for a single night before we were married, goodness knows I probably would never have seen you at all afterwards. The time to stop was right then; so I did. And I've always been glad of it, too."

The tiny handkerchief had been found at last and was being used vigorously to keep the tears that gleamed in her eyes from spilling onto her cheeks. Captain Warner put out his hand and gently turned her face up so he could look into it.

"Always?" he asked, softly. "Always, Patsy? You know, I was watching you this evening when you were listening to 'Dear Old Pal of Mine' just before I came into the room, and it didn't strike me that you looked so very happy just then. You looked about as happy as I must look myself when I hear that same song—that is, if I look the way I feel. I've missed you and wanted you like the devil, Patsy. You'll never know. It seems as if that song must have been written just to express my feelings about you, dear."

As he was speaking Patsy had thrust his hand away from her and turned her face toward the wall.

"I hate you for spying on me like that," she said. "And what if I have had regrets sometimes?"

She turned and faced him once more.

"Wouldn't any girl regret being disappointed in the man she lo—she had promised to marry. My unhappiness doesn't alter the situation the least bit."

"Would it make any difference if I told you I hadn't touched a card from that day to this?" demanded the captain, eagerly. "It's true, dear. I haven't. Not a single game."

Patsy looked her incredulity, but the young man, with a lover's intuition, must have sensed a subtle change in her attitude, for he continued earnestly:

"Why, what does gambling mean to me? Not a thing in the world if it's going to come between us. If I thought it meant your happiness I'd promise never to play again as long as I live. That goes, Patsy. I'm headed for the biggest gamble of all—and so are you, for that matter—but when this is over I'm off the God of Luck for life, if you say so."

My lady's pride battled for a moment with her true feelings, and at last pride seemed to gain the victory.

"I'm afraid it's too late for a promise like that to make any difference," she decided. "Since everything ahead of us is a gamble, as you say, perhaps it's just as well that things remain as they are."

"And when it's all over and we're back home again——?" he entreated.

I don't know what my mistress would have answered, but at that moment the canteen worker came down the corridor and the captain had to be presented to her. A little later he said good night and went away.

IF I had known more about young women I suppose I would not have been so puzzled by the behavior of my mistress during the next few days of that voyage, but at the time I could not understand why she made Captain Warner's life so miserable for him. She was gay and amusing and gracious with him during certain intervals each day, but at certain even more frequent intervals she was equally gay and amusing and gracious in the company of several other young men.

We were "cursed with moonlight" that trip, as the ship's captain put it, meaning that the whole convoy was a shining mark for any submarine that happened within range, but the apprehension caused by this circumstance did not prevent the young folks from getting out on deck in the evenings to enjoy the moon as such a moon deserved to be enjoyed. My little lady worshiped it with great zeal, but the moment Captain Warner would show up she'd become so pointedly gregarious that despite his unending efforts he was never able to lead her to any nook where they would be unobserved.

Finally, when I'm sure he must almost have given up hope, something happened which put a different complexion on the situation. We had entered the danger zone at last, and the nerves of every one aboard were at pretty high tension. The convoy proceeded without even the faintest light showing, and I'm sure our old stewardess was in and out of the stateroom two or three times every night to make sure that the girls had their lifebelts on or, at least, had them spread over the bedclothes as they slept.

It was about two o'clock one morning when the alarm which every one had been dreading actually came at last. The stewardess hammered on our door, shocking every one into wakefulness with the cry:

"A submarine! A submarine! Get to your places! Quick!"

It seemed to me her voice, high pitched with terror, half scarcely carried its fearsome message on to the adjoining corridor before there came another loud thumping on the door and Captain Warner's voice shouted: "Patsy! Are you up?"

She had thrown on her heavy coat at the first warning and now, with her lifebelt on her arm, she stepped quickly out into the corridor. For a brief instant she looked into the eyes of this man who had risked the disgrace of being late at his post of duty in order that he might make certain she had every chance for her life. Then, "It might be good-by, Patsy," he said quietly. That was enough. She flung herself into his arms. Their farewell was swift and wordless, but the kiss with which they parted made up for all those long months of misunderstanding and regret.

Of course the submarine attack never materialized or this story could not have been told, but I know of at least two people aboard who promptly erected a shrine in their holy of holies and dedicated it to the look out who had sounded the alarm.

MY mistress and her young man had to separate when we reached England, but they were both brave about it and promised to write to each other on every possible occasion the moment they got located in France. I can testify that my mistress kept her part of the bargain, but as the weeks passed by she wrote with increasingly heavy heart, for, save one letter which he mailed to her before his outfit left England, not a line did she get from him in return.

I could not understand this, and neither could my lady, but personally I had little time to waste in wondering about it, for if ever any one was busy in those days it was I. She was assigned without delay to one of the large hospitals near Paris, and I was installed in the big library, where the convalescents spent most of their time when they were not in bed. The first patient to arrive in the morning set me going, and I never stopped until the last one had been shooed out of the room at night. My mistress I saw only once in a while. There was a "big push" on just then, and our boys were coming in on the stretchers almost faster than they could be taken care of.

She managed to come in and visit me almost every day, nevertheless, sometimes to revive herself with the "Vision of Salome," as she had done the night I came to her, and at other times, if there were not too many people about, to put on "Dear Old Pal of Mine." At first she seemed rather to enjoy the memories which this song aroused in her, but as the weeks dragged by I noticed that she played it less and less. Finally she took the record out of the book altogether and hid it in her trunk, giving out that it had been broken.

It was about this time that I began to crack under the strain myself. It was a terrible war for me, all right. Those boys made me work so incessantly that at last something went wrong with my insides and I had to quit. My mistress and a group of convalescents held a consultation over me and decided to operate. I was turned over to a couple of men who had been in the motor transport service and they managed to patch up the trouble after a fashion, but I had no stamina left after the operation was over. My turntable would revolve smoothly enough once more, but somebody had to sit right beside me all the time and keep turning my crankhandle. Otherwise I hadn't punch enough to get half way through a record.

My mistress was resting in the library when the boys brought me in to try me out and naturally she joined them at once.

"Gee! I wisht 'Old Pal of Mine' hadn't went and got busted," lamented one of them as he looked over the pile of records, "I'll tell the world that was some song."

"'Dear Old Pal of Mine'? How does it go?" spoke up a new patient I hadn't seen before, an artillery officer who must have just been let out of the ward. He rolled his wheel chair up to the piano and shoved the stool out of the way. "Hum it to me," he says, "I think I know it."

The lad with the book of records gave him the melody and sure enough the artilleryman played it right through.

"Never will hear that song without thinking of Steve Warner," he commented.

I saw my mistress clutch at the edge of the piano.

"Steve used to sing that to himself all the time," the officer went on; "he was singing it at the very instant he was hit, poor devil."

I thought my lady was going to topple over at that, but she didn't.

"Hit, did you say?" she gasped, "Capt. Warner was hit? You don't mean he's——?" She couldn't bring herself to say the word.

The artillery officer grasped the situation in a flash. "I don't know, ma'am," he said, very kindly and gentle in his manner; "he was alive the last time I saw him. They were taking him to the field dressing station. Where he went from there I don't

Concerning the Black Magic of Dan, the Colored Boy, Who Produced from Mysterious Sources an Emergency Meal Fit for a King

ELEANOR BURNHAM—that is to say, Mrs. Frederick Munn Burnham—you know how particular brides of six months are about "Mrs." and their full names—was comfortably reading, curled up in one of the new wicker chairs on the diminutive but quite adequate sun porch. It was eleven o'clock of a pleasant summer morning. She had washed the breakfast dishes of blue and white Canton, Aunt Elizabeth's wedding gift, had brushed up the dining room and the living room, made the beds—little ivory enameled twins—and now was settled down for a pleasant reading of her favorite magazine. She loved to read. Sometimes she felt she spent too much time at it. Still, what else was there to do—for her—in Morrilton?

The telephone rang. In the lives of most of us a ring at the telephone is of little importance. Telephones are always ringing—except when you are waiting for an important call. The ringing of this particular telephone, at eleven o'clock in the morning, was different. Mrs. Frederick Munn Burnham, that is Eleanor—Norrie, if you feel you know her well enough for that—she was the sort of a person you feel you'd like to know well enough for nicknames—didn't expect the telephone to ring at eleven. It rang only once during the day, about one, when Fred telephoned to see how she was getting along. Outside of Fred, Norrie really knew only one person in Morrilton and he wasn't given to telephoning—his name was Dan and he was six feet of very dark, very lazy, very courteous southern colored boy—not at all the sort of person from whom one receives telephone calls.

"Hello," said Norrie, her voice quivering a bit from anticipation.

"Hello," answered Fred's agreeable, deep voice.

It couldn't be said that Norrie was disappointed. She was quite as much in love with Fred as she had been when she married him, and that was a very great deal, but Fred was the only person who ever telephoned her. It gets pretty lonesome, all day, if you don't talk to any one.

Fred was pleasantly excited. He was phoning from the office to tell Norrie that Richards, his boss, was in town. It was Richards' first visit to Morrilton since he had established a branch of his lumber company there, five months before, and made Fred local manager.

"He leaves tonight at nine," Fred went on, "so I've asked him up to the house for dinner. He's awfully anxious to see how we're fixed up, and I know you want to see him again, too. He's out in the yards now, looking things over. If you could get hold of some neat looking girl or man to serve—you know how Richards is about food and service. If you can't find any one, don't worry about it. I know you'll try hard. Just have a nice little dinner."

"I'll do the best I can," Norrie answered.

RICHARDS to dinner—her first company dinner and Fred's boss, combined! She wasn't a very good cook, she knew that. She cared more about other things, books and music, than cooking. For Fred her cooking did very well—but for company—well, she'd do her best. She'd been housekeeping ever since they'd moved to Morrilton. The first month of their marriage they'd boarded in Westville, where they had both always lived. Before marriage, Norrie had been too busy having good times—going to parties and dances—Fred's home had been just across the street—to bother about learning to cook. Fred had been made head of the new branch of the lumber company and they'd moved to Morrilton and rented the little white cottage—and here they were.

Morrilton was a nice little town. Norrie knew that people had an awfully good time in it. Fred and she had passed the country club on their walks Saturday afternoons, but no one had invited them to join it, though they saw people playing tennis on the courts and drinking lemonade on the lawn. In Westville, her father was president of the country club, and her mother and Fred's mother belonged to the Westville Woman's club and the Wednesday club, and she and Fred were included in all of the town's activities—why, she'd been a debutante only two years before. And here, in Morrilton, where they were going to live for years, maybe, they didn't know any one. Fred had a few business acquaintances—but none of them had asked to call or to bring their wives to call. They had gone to church and the minister—a widower—had called once, when they were not at home. He had been their only caller. In Westville, people liked Fred and Norrie. Norrie felt that if they just had a chance, got acquainted, maybe people in Morrilton might like them, too. Well, anyhow, now they were going to have a guest to dinner. Mr. Richards was particular about things, Norrie knew. She'd have an especially good dinner for him. It would mean a lot to Fred.

AS she was leaving the telephone, Norrie remembered that it was Thursday and that, during the summer in Morrilton, the groceries and meat markets close at noon that day. She glanced at her wrist. It was a good thing she had thought of it—she had an hour to order in, anyhow.

Norrie phoned an order to the butcher for a small rib roast of beef, for roast beef, steaks, and chops were the only meats she knew how to prepare. She felt it was quite important for Mr. Richards to see she was a good cook, that they were happy—that Fred was getting along all right, otherwise he might send some one else to Morrilton instead. Morrilton was lonely—when you didn't know any one. But it meant a big opportunity for Fred. She'd work hard over the dinner, have a good one.

From the grocer Norrie ordered peas, then tomatoes and lettuce for salad, and a little cake. She knew she couldn't bake—nor even cook plain things very well. But that would be a good dinner—roast beef, mashed potatoes, and peas; she had potatoes in her small pantry; the crisp salad, and then thin slices of cake and coffee. Richards would think she was quite a wonderful cook—if the roast was good. That was the main thing, of course. Well, she could hope hard.

Norrie straightened up things in the small cottage again, arranged the magazines in neat piles, and wiped imaginary dust from the living room table. It was a dear little cottage. She liked it a great deal. Then she set the table—might as well have it over with. How nice the silver looked for company. It had been Fred's parents' gift to them—the kind of silver that company ought to see.

Then Norrie went back to her magazine. After all, no use starting dinner as early as all this. At one she prepared her lunch, a left-over chop, a tiny sandwich. The groceries came. Norrie shelled the peas and peeled potatoes, washed the lettuce and put it on the ice in the lettuce bag, then went back to her magazine again. It must have been an especially good number, for, when next she looked at her wrist, it was near four o'clock. She jumped up. The meat hadn't come!

She went to the telephone. No one answered at the butcher's. Of course not. They were closed—had closed at twelve. It didn't seem possible. She rang again. No answer. Ten minutes later she rang again. No answer. They had forgotten to send her meat or had sent it to the wrong address. They did that sometimes, when they were rushed. Usually it didn't matter.

NORRIE hung up the receiver and slowly walked back into the little sun porch and stood looking out of the window. It didn't seem possible. It wasn't fair. Richards to dinner—and no dinner—nothing but potatoes and a few peas and a salad—and men never like salad—and most of the pods of peas had been empty. What could she do? There wasn't a good restaurant in Morrilton. She knew Richards hated hotel food—that's probably why he was coming to dinner—she remembered he had complained about the Morrison house, when he first stopped there, when he opened the office.

In Westville, now, there were lots of things she could have done. There was the delicatessen store, in the first place, where you can always get lovely pink and white slices of ham, with cloves accentuating the whiteness of the fat. But not here. In Westville there were dozens, actually, of people who could have helped her out, loaned her their meat, if necessary—and there wasn't a soul in Morrilton who even spoke to her. It wasn't as if Morrilton wasn't a nice town. It was probably as nice as Westville, if you were on the inside of things. A stranger would probably find Westville just the way she found Morrilton. If there had been only one person here from home—one family. There wasn't.

Except Dan—if you can count Dan. But Norrie didn't even know where Dan was—and how could he have helped, anyhow?

Dan had appeared, a month before, at her back door, and asked for work, an awkward, tall colored boy, black and shining and good natured of face, white of teeth. Dan, of course, hadn't expected to see any one he knew in Morrilton. But something in the round black face had attracted Norrie's attention—still, of course, colored boys look much alike. So Norrie had let him cut the grass and clean the kitchen. Then, as she paid him, she had remarked, with seeming carelessness:

"You look like the son of Aunt Martha, the woman who used to do my mother's washing down south in Westville, where I came from."

The boy had rolled his eyes in an ecstasy that, for a moment, had worried Norrie. Then, with an explosion of giant bursts of laughter, he had explained that he was Aunt Martha's boy, "back from the war," and that, of course, he recognized her now, only he hadn't even been looking for home folks this far away from home.

Dan had been discharged from the army, it seemed, and had been given his ticket home—but too much liquor of a peculiarly violent home brew had robbed him of his memory for a few hours and had been the cause of the loss of his money and his ticket, too. He had found himself stranded in Morrilton without friends, and now was doing odd jobs to save up enough money to go home. So once a week he appeared at the Burnhams' neat little cottage, attended to the yard, scrubbed kitchen and bath, and received, besides his wage, a good meal because he was "home folks." And Norrie had often found tears in her eyes after a talk with him. Big Dan—home folks—and no one else to talk with all day while Fred was gone——

This wasn't even the day for Dan—he might have suggested something. There was no one else. No use bothering Fred—he wouldn't know what to do; he was busy with Richards, anyhow; he depended on her for a nice dinner.

NORRIE looked at the houses across the street, each with its little family, each knowing some of the other neighbors. She looked at the house next door, the Philbrook house. Of all houses, why did their little cottage have to be next to the Philbrooks? For Mrs. Philbrook was Morrilton's social leader. She was president of two of the woman's clubs and it was she who organized the little informal dances at the country club, the pleasantest parties. Norrie had gleaned that from watching the house next door and from reading the Morrilton papers. There were just the two Philbrooks; Mr. Philbrook, tall, severe looking, gray haired; Mrs. Philbrook, tall, too, a bit stouter, with her brown hair always carefully waved and arranged. They looked stern, maybe, though, if you knew them——

The Philbrook house was not bad looking. Norrie always glanced at it with distinct approval whenever she passed. It was a pleasant home of English architecture, not especially large, but with big rooms and an immense glassed sun room, where a cook and a maid and a chauffeur managed to make Mr. and Mrs. Philbrook very comfortable. The Philbrooks didn't even know the Burnhams existed. At least it seemed that way. Norrie and Fred had passed them dozens, hundreds of times—and the Philbrooks apparently hadn't ever seen them at all.

What could she do for dinner? You can't go to people's houses when you've never been introduced and politely—or impolitely—ask for their meat. No meat—and here it was, after four o'clock, time for dinner to be started, nearly. Dinner in Morrilton is at six, and Fred usually got home a little earlier.

Fred had asked her to get some one to wait on the table. He—and apparently Richards, too—hated to see her bob up and down between courses. In Westville there were always dozens of girls you could get, who served nicely, but here, of course, there wasn't even an employment agency. You don't need any one to serve, if there isn't any dinner, but Fred had asked for some one, so Norrie looked up all possible disguises of employment agencies in the telephone book. She found none. Then she tried to telephone to every butcher in Morrilton. The phones were not answered. She asked for the number of her own butcher again, hoping that, perhaps——. No answer.

It was nearly half past four. Fred would be home at six, Fred and Mr. Richards.

Well, the table was set. The vegetables were ready to boil, the salad was clean and cold.

She ran to the small bedroom, bathed and dressed, arranged her brown hair with especial care, powdered her smooth skin, and put on a dainty blue and white organdie, with a huge white fichu which crossed in front and ended in an immense bow in the back. She'd put a big apron on it while she cooked. It was one of Fred's favorite dresses. It did feel cool and fresh.

Dinner—a dinner for Mr. Richards—and it was five o'clock, one hour to dinner-time. Potatoes, a few peas, a salad, grocery cake—and Mr. Richards was Fred's boss. Fred had asked for an especially nice dinner!

Norrie looked at her small shelf of emergency things—and shuddered. Fred had the habit of invading that shelf after they returned from the movies or a long walk. It was almost devastated now, nothing there for dinner—as she knew before she looked—a can of pimentos, a small can of mushrooms. Those were a delicacy that she had kept for a special occasion. Well, this was a special occasion—what could you do with a half-sized can? There was sugar and flour. O, a real cook could probably scramble something together. But Norrie wasn't a real cook, just a frightened little bride, a lonely little bride with big eyes and brown hair, pretty even when she was frightened and unhappy.

Norrie cried a little—and washed and powdered her face again. If something—a miracle—could only happen.

AT half past five, while she was trying carefully to wipe her eyes so the tears wouldn't run down and take all of the powder off her face again, the back door bell rang. Could it be—the miracle?

It didn't look like one. At the door stood Dan, his big teeth showing in a perfect frenzy of delight.

"Ah'm goin' away, back home, tonight Ah'm goin'," said Dan. "Ah've come for to tell you-all good-by. Ah'll go by and see yuoah mamma and tell huh Ah seen you, hones' Ah will. It's been mighty good, seein' home folks up hyah."

Dan took from his pocket a long and somewhat soiled ticket.

"You're not really going away?" asked Norrie. This big, good natured fellow had been the last link with home. Why—she had even saved the Westville newspaper for him. The tears started in her eyes again.

"Yes'm, tonight. Me for home, nevah more to roam," said Dan, under the impression that he was quoting poetry. "You gonna have dinnah tonight, Ah see. You want Ah should help around hyah wid dinnah?"

Norrie laughed, a sad little laugh. Dan—to serve dinner and nothing to serve. Dan stumbling around the table with potatoes—and peas.

"You can't serve, can you, Dan?" she

THE RECORD OF PATSY'S "PORTABLE"

Come to Think of It, Why Shouldn't a Talking Machine Be Able to Tell a Story of Love, War, and Misunderstanding?

MY adventures really began on the day the delivery boy with the leather leggings took me up in the service elevator of a handsome Park avenue apartment house and turned me over to a solemn faced man-servant. The man-servant carried me to a large, sunshiny bedroom, where I found myself in the midst of a confusion which reminded me of nothing so much as the assembling room at the factory, except that instead of springs, and gears, and crank-handles, and sounding boxes, this room was littered with nurses' uniforms, starched cuffs, belts, white stockings, and the countless additional items indispensable to a feminine traveling kit.

In the center of it all, perched on a steamer trunk, was a young woman to whom I took an immediate fancy. She was gazing about her with a look born half of amusement and half of despair.

"Hodges, how am I ever going to get all these things into this one teentsy weentsy little trunk?" she wailed. "I've eliminated and eliminated, but—O, what's that?" She hopped up and came over to meet us.

"Something terrible heavy, Miss Patricia," he answered. "That's all I know. It just came this minute."

"How exciting!" she exclaimed, her brown eyes wide with interest. "Unlock it, Hodges." While he was getting my case open she knelt on the rug with her hands clasped beside her chin and stared like a child watching the cook put the frosting on the cake. I was just as interested as she was, for I knew this must be the Patricia Blair whose name had been lettered on my carrying case the day before, together with a neat red cross, very gay and impressive.

SUCH an adorable little creature I never had seen before in all the span of my short life. Chestnut hair, she had, bobbed off in the fashion that graces only a few, but when it does grace them makes them irresistible; a pair of lips that could have pouted most enchantingly if their owner had not obviously been of the sort rarely given to pouting; and a nose with a fine, firm bridge and sensitive nostrils. The contour of her neck betokened the gift of good health, and this was confirmed by every rounded line of her.

Her serious, level brows and capable looking hands indicated an amount of dependability scarcely to be looked for in one bred as she must have been in such surroundings, nor was this quality lessened in the least by her air of childlike enthusiasm. I learned later that her age seemed to vary greatly with her mood, but in point of actual years she was not long out of her teens.

When the cover of my case was raised she clapped her hands in genuine delight. "A phonograph!" she cried. "O, how gorgeous! It's one of those new portable ones for overseas. Lift it out, Hodges. Mother! Come here. See what just came."

By the time Mrs. Blair reached the room, Hodges had set me up and my new mistress had seized upon a little card tucked in my book of records.

"'To my darling Patsy, from her affectionate Aunt Gloria,'" she read aloud. "Isn't she a duck, Mother? My, what heaps and heaps of fun I'll have with this. Let's see how it sounds."

She gave me "A Vision of Salome" to play, and seated herself on the edge of the bed. Being anxious to make a good impression, I put into the strains of that exotic Oriental piece every particle of resonance I could command. At the wild, clanging, barbaric measures just preceding the finale, Patsy leaped to her feet and flung herself tumultously around the room, swaying and bending her graceful body as though the mad rhythm of the dance had quite enthralled her. She wound up, breathless, with her arms around her mother's neck.

"That has saved my life," she announced. "I had given up all hope of ever getting packed in time to go aboard tomorrow, but now my spirits have been given a grand old boost and I'm prepared to wade into this mess undaunted."

With her mother helping her, she set about the packing once more and at one o'clock the following morning they finished it. Twice during the evening I was called upon to repeat the "Vision of Salome" and each time the work went on much more cheerily when I had obliged. Mr. Blair, an upstanding, gray haired man with a firm but kindly face, was in and out of the room from time to time all evening, but never stayed long. It was plain to be seen that Patsy's actual preparations for departure were almost more than he could stand.

Once he picked up from her desk a little frame containing the photograph of a good looking young man with close cropped hair, close set ears, and a deep-cleft, aggressive chin.

"Aren't you going to take this with you, Patsy?" he asked.

His daughter glanced at it and shook her head. "I think not, Daddy, dear," she replied. "You can just slip it into that lower drawer with the others, if you will, please."

Her father did as she requested. "I'm sorry," he said. "I had hoped you youngsters would get things straightened out long before this. I liked that boy." Then he left the room.

When he had gone Mrs. Blair busied herself in silence for some time, looking at Patsy when Patsy wasn't looking at her, and suppressing several sudden impulses to speak. At last she asked quietly, "Where is Stephen these days, Patsy?"

"In France, I presume," my little lady replied. "His battery sailed three or four months ago."

"Hasn't he ever written to you?" her mother inquired further.

"Not a line since the day I sent him away," said Patsy, bending over to fold some aprons with unnecessary precision, it seemed to me, as if she didn't want her mother to look into her face just then. "I hardly thought he would—after what I said to him."

"Have you ever thought perhaps you were a little too harsh with him, dear?" suggested her mother.

"O, mother, please!" protested Patsy, almost tearfully. "If I was I'm the one who's had to suffer it. Don't let's talk about it any more, dearest. I know you don't want to make me unhappy—not now, of all times."

"All right, Baby, all right," said Mrs. Blair hastily, "only I do feel that Stephen has good stuff in him. He's been spoiled, that I'll admit, but he'll get over it."

PATSY made no comment on this, and apparently dismissed the young man from her mind. For that reason I was all the more interested when I saw her switch on the light at her bedside, after all the others were asleep, and patter across the floor to the desk. Returning with the photograph in its little frame, she curled her feet under her on the edge of the bed and sat for a long time, looking at the picture so wistfully that I could not but marvel at her decision to leave it behind. Presently she stole across the room to her handbag and came back to the lamp with a folding leather case containing the photographs of her father and mother. In another moment she had taken the young man's picture out of its frame, pressed her pretty lips to it for an instant, and concealed it in the leather case behind the picture of Mr. Blair. Then she hid the empty frame in the drawer, put the case back in the bag, and slipped into bed with a sigh of sleepy contentment.

I wish I could describe what I read in the faces of Mr. and Mrs. Blair the next morning when Patsy stood forth before them for the first time in all the glory of her new overseas uniform. Adoration; intense and glowing pride; apprehension; the gray shadow of impending loneliness—all these shone through the brave smiles with which they greeted her. It is difficult to look beautiful and businesslike at the same time, but somehow Patsy managed to look just that. Her uniform was extremely well tailored and she wore her plain little hat with a certain demure sauciness which robbed it of all severity. It was no wonder that they felt proud of her.

Fortunately for the three of them, there was such a host of final preparations needing attention that day the moment of parting faced them abruptly before they had time to dwell upon it. As Hodges carried me out to the limousine I saw Mrs. Blair in the front hall with Patsy clasped tightly in her arms. The tears which must have been gathering since early morning had burst forth at last, drowning all speech and making that final moment of farewell a matter wholly of sobs and kisses.

Down at the pier a couple of soldiers took charge of me and the little steamer trunk and a few moments later we were jammed together with two other trunks in a stateroom on the starboard side.

My mistress came down soon after dinner that evening and sat up until midnight unpacking a few things for the trip and getting acquainted with the canteen worker and the "Y" entertainer who shared the stateroom with us. The ship moved down the harbor and out to sea early next morning and all three girls were so excited that I scarcely caught a glimpse of them the whole day long. It was perhaps half past eight that night when I heard the voice of my mistress in the narrow corridor leading from the main hall down to the stateroom door.

"Here it is," she said as she stepped inside and switched the light on. "You better take case and all along. The case makes a table for the machine to stand on."

To my unbounded delight the two young officers to whom she was speaking picked me up and carried me to a corner of the huge lounging room on the deck above, where it would be false modesty to deny that I at once became the center of attraction. Officers of all ranks and all branches of the service joined with the nurses and welfare workers in crowding around to hear my first recital. My mistress presided over the occasion with the charm of a natural hostess, and I rendered "The Rose of No Man's Land," and "Smiles," and "I'm Sorry I Made You Cry," and "There's a Long, Long Trail," and dear knows how many others, almost every one of which was followed by the exclamation, "Gee, that's great! Play it again, won't you, please?" So we'd have it over again until, with one exception, all the records in my supply had been played at least twice, and, in some cases, oftener.

The one exception was "Dear Old Pal of Mine," and I couldn't understand why my mistress didn't put it on. It was at the peak of its popularity just then, and Mr. McCormack had put his golden voice into it in a way that went straight to one's heart. Furthermore, my little lady had played it the day I arrived, and once when her mother had left her alone for a few moments she had put it on and played it again. Seated on the floor, with her arms resting on the end of her chaise lounge and her chin resting on her arms, she had heard it through almost to the end with no sign of emotion save the far away look in her eyes. But when the throbbing notes rose for a second time to the words:

Sweetheart, may God bless you,
Angel hands caress you,
While sweet dreams rest you, dear old pal of mine, her face had disappeared suddenly into the crook of her elbow and remained there until the scratching of my needle called her back to herself.

Now it came back to me that upon that occasion she had carefully placed the record in the last compartment of the book, where it still remained and where she evidently was taking pains to see that no one found it. I was still pondering over this whim of hers when she brought the concert gracefully to a close and selected two eager lieutenants to carry me down to the stateroom for her.

I had no means of knowing what was going on out of doors, but I gathered from the conversation in the stateroom that our boat was just one of a large convoy of troop ships and that the venomous activity of the enemy's undersea craft just at that time made such convoys imperative.

DESPITE the danger of which these precautions gave evidence, the young folks on board—and that meant almost everybody—managed to pass the time quite enjoyably, from all I could gather. Two more officers came down to the stateroom the next night and bore me up to the lounge with great ceremony. I did my prettiest and had about exhausted my repertoire for the second time when somebody got hold of the book of records and pulled out the one in the last compartment. "Why, here's one we haven't had at all," said two or three of the audience who happened to glance at it. "What's the matter with this one?"

Of course there was nothing to do then but put it on, so my lady did so and sat listening to it in silence with the rest. Before the second verse was finished she chanced to raise her eyes to a nearby doorway, and I thought her breath had stopped for good and all when she realized whose eyes were gazing back into hers. They were those of the young man her mother had called Stephen.

Once glance at him and I was sure of it. He had paused on the threshold, surveying the group around my mistress with stern, half resentful amazement, and I recognized immediately the close set ears, the deep cleft chin, and the short, wiry hair. The hair was red, I observed, something which, of course, the photograph now warmly reposing in the breast pocket of my lady's jacket did not disclose. His uniform proclaimed him a captain of artillery, and a strapping, deep chested specimen he was.

The timid smile of welcome which her heart flashed to her lips involuntarily at first was smothered quickly in the frigidly formal nod of recognition my lady bestowed upon this newcomer. She turned away at once thereafter, as if it were a matter of no moment to her whether he entered the room or passed on, yet I knew this to be sheer pretense, for I felt her hand tremble on my crank handle.

There was no pretense about him, however. He strode straight to her side, searching her face with eyes which took no account of interested onlookers.

"I didn't know you were on this ship," he blurted out, without preliminary greeting of any kind. "Where have you been keeping yourself?"

My mistress faced him with well simulated perplexity. "Why, it's—it's—" she glanced at the bars on his shoulder—"it's Captain—Captain Warner!" she exclaimed. "I thought you had gone over long ago."

Apparently he didn't know just what to make of this, but after a quick glance at the others he took his cue from her and remarked in a more impersonal tone:

"No, they held me back to help train a new outfit."

"Won't you sit down?" she invited him. "Our nightly concert is about over, but I've just had a request to play this last record once more."

"Good," said he, perching himself on the arm of her chair; "that's what drew me in here, that song. It's one of my favorites. I just happened to hear it as I was passing by."

"On your way to the cardroom, I presume," said my mistress, in an undertone.

I judged by his aggrieved expression that those words had a meaning for him that was not disclosed to the rest of us. "Smoking room," he corrected her. "They don't allow us to play cards."

"What a frightful deprivation—for some people," said she. "How can you ever endure it?"

I finished the introduction and began the song just then, so he did not deign to an-

DINNER

NORRIE hung up the receiver and slowly walked back into the little sun parlor. She didn't seem possible. She rang again. No answer. Ten minutes later she rang again. No answer. They had forgotten to send her meat or had sent it to the wrong address. They did that sometimes, when they were rushed. Usually it didn't matter.

The Philbrook house was not bad looking. Norrie always glanced at it with distinct approval whenever she passed. It was a pleasant home of English architecture, not especially large, but with big rooms and an immense glassed sun room, where a cook and a maid and a chauffeur managed to make Mr. and Mrs. Philbrook very comfortable. The Philbrooks didn't even know asked. He had never wanted to do this kind of work before.

"Kin Ah serve? Kin Ah serve? Why, ma'am, in de army Ah was de bes' servah dey had. First Ah done kitchen police, yes'm, and den Ah done kitchen police fur officers, yes'm, and den Ah serves officers' mess, yes'm. An' when der was some'm to eat, Ah serve 'em like dis." Dan's hand held an imaginary dish.

"Offer 'em food to de left, yes'm, put down and take away plates to de right, yes'm. Kin Ah serve? Ah say, lemme serve tonight, ma'am, an' Ah'll eat dinnah and clean de dishes when Ah gets through."

Serve—and eat dinner. There wouldn't be anything left for Dan to eat, unless Fred and the guest refused everything. If only there was a dinner that could be served. She wanted dreadfully to cry. Before she realized what she was doing, Norrie had poured into Dan's ears the full story of the dinner.

Dan was all sympathy. Only a big child by nature, a missed company dinner sounded quite tragic to him—and Norrie was home folks—his folks, besides.

"You leave it to me. Ah'll find some'm," he said, "like we used to do in France. Salvage, dat's what you call it. Ah'll find a dinnah for you, yes'm, a good dinnah. Glad to do it. Ain't you from Westville? An' Ah tell you, you ought to see me serve in a white jacket an' all——

"But Ah ain't got no white jacket—lemme see, a friend of mine, a barbah, he's got a white jacket—and ain't a barbah's jacket a servin' jacket? Ain't dey both white? Ah'll say yes'm, Ah'll get de jacket, an' some meat. Meat—dat's all you need?"

"Yes," said Norrie.

The miracle had happened!

DAN disappeared out of the door. She watched his long legs shambling down the street. After all, maybe he could find something. Things couldn't be any worse, anyhow.

Norrie put the potatoes and the peas on to boil. You can't eat potatoes and peas—small portions—without something more substantial—still, it was time to cook them, might as well have them on the stove. As they boiled, she prepared the salad. Some of the lettuce was brown and worm-eaten. One of the tomatoes was too soft to slice—there were barely three portions and they were not very large ones. What difference did it make, anyhow? Norrie put the plates of salad carefully into the ice box. Potatoes—a few peas and a scant salad—company to dinner!

She felt a little better, somehow, when the preparations were finished. It was a quarter of six. In fifteen minutes Fred and Richards would arrive. Her first dinner guest!

The minutes dragged and flew—Norrie kept her eyes alternately on the window and her watch. No Dan in sight! He wouldn't come back. Probably even now he was showing his ticket to his friend the barber, if he even got that far. Dan—in a barber's suit—serving potatoes. What a farce of a meal!

Five minutes of six. No Dan in sight. Four, three minutes of six—six o'clock.

At five minutes after six, Norrie took the potatoes off, mashed them with butter and milk—they could be reheated, now, without spoiling them. It wouldn't hurt the peas to boil a little longer. She sliced the cake into delicate slices—if she only knew how to make icing, that might help—but she didn't. She had tried, once, and it had been dreadfully grainy. The cake looked nice, anyhow. She put the coffee in the percolator, all ready to boil, rolled the butter into balls, cut the bread and put it on the silver bread tray.

A quarter after six—twenty minutes after. No Dan, no Fred nor guest, either—and no dinner. What if——

There was a sound of footsteps coming up the front walk. Norrie hurried to the front door. There were Mr. Richards and Fred.

"Late, aren't we?" asked Fred. "Couldn't help it—got to talking over things."

"Hope we haven't let your dinner spoil," said Richards, "but you young women are such excellent cooks and managers these days."

"They certainly are," said Fred. "Why, six months ago this little wife couldn't cook a thing—and now her dinners—you wait and see."

"If—if you'll go into the living room," said Norrie, "dinner'll be ready in five minutes——I—I wanted things to be nice and warm."

Nice and warm! The peas were even smaller and more shriveled than she had thought. She took the salad from the refrigerator. Such little dishes of salad! Dinner!

She sat down on her high kitchen stool and put her head on her arms. She could hear Fred and Mr. Richards talking and laughing, washing their hands in the tiny bathroom, looking around the cottage, walking into the living room. Dinner! For her husband's boss! Why, she was a failure, couldn't cook or manage—hadn't any friends—if only there was some way—poison even—so she wouldn't disgrace Fred, be a burden to him.

THERE was a hand on the back door knob. The door opened—she remembered she had forgotten to lock it—and Dan came in—the miracle had happened! A resplendent Dan entered, already clad in a startling white coat—but, most wonderful of all, on a huge platter he held high in both of his black hands—it couldn't be—a roasted chicken! It was brown and crisp of skin and smoking hot. At one end you could see the dressing oozing forth, appetizingly. The drumsticks stood aloft, brown and shiny.

"Is—is it real?" asked Norrie. She went closer and touched of the crisp, crackly brown skin. A delicious feeling of happiness came over her.

"Yes'm, dat de realest chicken you evah seen," chuckled Dan. "He's some real. An' when you-all get through dinnah, Ah'll have him. What you-all don't eat o' dat chicken belongs to me. You-all kin keep youah potatoes an' dat stuff. All Ah want is what's lef' of dat chicken. An' now Ah'll serve him. Kin Ah serve? Offer to de lef', put down to de right. Kin Ah serve?"

"Where did you get the chicken?" asked Norrie. The question was automatic. She didn't care, just then, really.

"Ah—you meant dat chicken? Ah—Ah—salvaged him."

"Yes, but that's what you said before. Did you buy him from a friend?"

"Ah—oh, Mis' Burnham. Dis ain't no time to ask questions—no' to buy no chicken—you waitin' fo' dinnah an' me leavin' town tonight. Buy dat chicken? Who's goin' sell me a baked chicken, hot from de oven. Buy dat chicken?"

"Where did you get that chicken?" asked Norrie, a trifle more seriously. Part of the pleasant, warm feeling she had felt was going away. He had stolen the chicken. Of course—that——

"Well, Ah'll tell you, Mis' Burnham. You eat dis chicken an' don't you worry. You go on in now with de company an' Ah'll come in an say, stylish like, 'Dinnah is served,' and you eat de chicken—it's good chicken—smell of it—and what's lef' Ah gets."

"Yes," said Norrie, "what's left you get. But where did you get it? We won't eat it until I know."

The smile left Dan's face. He shuffled his feet, sniffled.

"Well, if you insis' on knowin', Ah tried to get it further away, honest Ah did. Ah—Ah went into six other houses"——

"Six houses?"

"Yes'm, six. An' Ah looked in a lot more, where Ah couldn't get in cause some one in de kitchen. But them six, they was awful poor-folksy. Corn beef and cabbage in one—and the littlest pork chops you ever seen in another—not for when Westville folks has company. Ah says, when my home folks has company they's got to have some'm good."

"You don't mean to say you went into people's kitchens to steal their dinners?"

"Yes'm—salvage—dat's de word. You tells me to get you-all a dinnah—and Ah goes. An' hyah's you dinnah—an' now Ah serve. An' de way to serve it—firs' you takes de chicken to de master"——

"The chicken?" asked Norrie, sternly, "where did you get it?"

"Yes, ma'am, I was comin' to dat." Dan was a bit more cheerful, yet he paused as if trying to think of a good story.

"The truth, Dan," prompted Norrie.

"Well, ma'am," Dan drawled, then more briskly, "Ah tol' you to eat dat chicken and not ask no question, Mis' Burnham, an' you wouldn't listen to me. Ah—Ah got dat chicken right nex' door, at de Philbricks—Philbrooks—you call 'em—so you can bet it's a good chicken. It was in de oven, all ready for 'em. No chicken at de Philbrooks tonight, you bet'cha."

"The Philbrooks—you took their chicken?"

"Took? Salvage, ma'am. In the ahmy, where Ah served de officers' mess"——

NORRIE wasn't listening. Here was a chicken, a big, brown, juicy, tender, hot chicken, with a peculiarly delicious aroma—and in the living room were Fred and Mr. Richards—her Fred, proud of her, good to her—of course she ought to do right—what did it matter—a stolen chicken—still, stealing and receiving stolen property—Dan ought to be made to take it back, of course—she ought to take it back—Dan had done this for her. It wasn't easy, thinking it out. She glanced at her watch. Twenty minutes to seven! Dinner!

"All right, serve it," she said briefly, guiltily to Dan, and went into the living room.

"Though you'd forgotten about food," said Fred, pleasantly.

"No, I didn't," said Norrie, "only when I saw you were late I didn't want things to spoil—and not knowing when you'd get here——"

Dan stood in the doorway.

"Dinnah is served," he said solemnly.

It was a good dinner. Even Norrie admitted that. And Dan, in the white barber's coat, served nicely, with only a bit too much of a flourish. Norrie felt that Mr. Richards agreed with her about the dinner. He ate as if he did, anyhow. Dan brought the chicken in and set it before Fred, who carved it into tender, delicious white and dark slices. Dan passed creamy, fluffy potatoes and new peas in the silver dish. And they ate so heartily that the tiny dishes of salad, followed by the cake and coffee, seemed a splendid ending to the meal.

As they went into the living room, Richards gave a great, comfortable sigh.

"That is a real dinner," he said. "That was a wonderful bird and deliciously prepared. Do you know, I've been away from home ten days now, and this is the first home meal I've had that tasted like anything. Glad to know a young woman who can cook. The wife really has the husband's future in her hands these days. It's funny, you must have known I was on a diet—no red meats of any kind—I forgot to tell Fred—so that chicken just hit the spot."

The men were smoking in the sun room when Norrie went back to the kitchen. Dan had cleaned things up pretty well, finished his own dinner and was wrapping part of the chicken into a newspaper.

"You can't tell about these hyah train trips," he said. "No use one good meal today and nothing fo' days to come, if we gets delayed. An', now that Ah'm goin' home, Ah'll have to stop dis hyah salvagin'."

"I hope so," said Norrie.

But she went into the bedroom and came back with one of Fred's old suits—he could have worn it rainy days, but he didn't need it, really, with his two nice ones. He had told her so weeks before.

Dan received the suit with appropriate thanks, showed his ticket again, and, after a grinning and elaborate farewell, was gone.

NORRIE finished cleaning the kitchen. Well, the dinner was over—a good dinner—and she had eaten stolen property. The Philbrooks would find out—have her arrested, probably. But aside from that—it was the same as stealing, of course, to let Dan steal. The chicken was gone now, but the platter—there it was, big and oval and gleaming. She, Norrie, had served her first dinner guest—and Fred—stolen property!

She joined the men in the sun room. They included her in their conversation. They spoke lightly, pleasantly, as if nothing had happened. Her heart was like lead. She had given them a good dinner—it seemed as if her prayer for a miracle had been answered by some evil power—a stolen chicken—it would have been better if the chicken had been a failure—still—without the chicken——

The men talked—she listened occasionally. Mr. Richards rose to go; he'd catch the car at the corner, just make his train.

They stood at the door with him.

"With a wife like you, Mrs. Burnham, a man like Fred can go far," he said, as he told her good-by. They shook hands heartily. He was gone.

"I can't tell you how proud I was of you," said Fred, with a big bear hug, as the door closed. "I was so afraid it might be too much on such short notice. But what a dinner! It was great. Richards told me some things about the business, said I was doing all right, talked confidentially. He'll remember the pleasant ending to his visit. It will help a lot—you're a real help."

If Fred knew she was a thief—the same thing! Fred was so honest, earnest, about everything—and she had served stolen chicken to him—chicken stolen for her by a Negro boy.

"Fred," she said, and was surprised how natural her voice sounded, "you sit down and read—I know you're tired. Two new magazines came this morning. I've got to do some things in the kitchen and don't you bother me."

"If you don't mind, I shall," said Fred—he usually helped after dinner. "I am tired, all day with Richards—so many things." He settled down in the big chair.

"Back in a minute," called Norrie, "not much to do, Dan did most of the dishes. Have a good time reading."

She flew to the bedroom for her purse.

The KOUTUB

A Tower of Victory at Delhi, India

"When the Mussulman general, Koutub-ood-deen-Eibeg, took possession of the capital of the Rajpoot emperor, Pirthi-Raj, he resolved to erect in the very centre of the conquered city, in commemoration of his victory, a column which should be an emblem of the triumph of Islam over Brahminism. By his command the foundations of this tower of victory were laid in the year 1200."

THE loftiest towers of the cathedrals of Europe rest upon such enormous basements, and terminate in such slender points, that their height impresses one more by the statement of the figures which represent it than by the effect itself. Here, on the contrary, the isolation of the building and the simplicity of its outlines lend it the appearance of even larger dimensions than it really possesses; and the architect himself has indulged his fancy for exaggerating the ordinary effect of perspective by giving the tower the form of a cylinder lessened towards the summit, or of a portion of a very elongated cone, and by dividing it into four stories, diminishing in height as they are farther removed from the ground. Its ornamentation is singularly effective, although very simple as a whole. Each story, alternately covered with perpendicular, round, or angular flutings, is surrounded by a broad girdle of flowers and arabesques, and supports a massive balcony, covered with sculptures of great beauty, standing out in strong relief from the tower. The entire building is of red sandstone, with the exception of the upper part, which is incased in white marble.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.)—Cloky, matelasse, gaufré!

There, it may sound like whooping cough or a Choctaw incantation, but don't mind that. Say these words over and over again. Commit them to memory. For if you don't you will be as completely lost as the picnicker who goes to Jersey without mosquito netting or the person who tries to read Latin without having learned to conjugate the verb "amo."

The fact of it is that these three fabrics are stressed so much in the midsummer and early autumn collections that they assume the importance of a creed or of a glossary. Wraps, frocks, and hats—to say nothing of blouses—also of waistcoats—all seem to follow where this new magician beckons. So, for the benefit of those who have passed over too lightly this branch of learning, I am going to repeat the definitions of the three fanciful weaves to which I have just referred.

Cloky is a material which has been blistered or, in other words, treated to a raised pattern. Not to be confused with this is the second fabric, matelasse. For it owes its pattern, also raised, to the presence of an all over stitching. As to gaufré, you recognize it by the innumerable wrinkles which have been produced by a process of hot irons.

It is of cloky that the designer has achieved the costume to the left of today's page. This is in the almond green tint which at present prevails so widely, and it is finished with bands of white cloky, to which have been appliqued designs in red, yellow, blue, and black satin. The quaint little hat, reminiscent of David Copperfield's Dora, is of matching materials.

Although this is a frock, you will see that it seeks its inspiration in the fashionable blouse of the moment. That the blouse has been somewhat overshadowed by novelties like the separate jacket—this, too, is often of cloky or matelasse—which so many fashionable women brought back with them from Paris is a fact which there is no gainsaying. Nevertheless, the elaborate blouse will always have its adherents, and these include many New York women with a reputation for smart dressing. For example, the stunning blouse second from the left was sponsored at one of the big out of doors sports events by a certain widely known member of the Newport colony.

This model, which is worn with a skirt alternating stripes of brown satin and tan crêpe, is achieved through the combination of gaufré or crinkled blue silk with bands of plain white satin and embroidery in brown and green. The hat of brown duvetyn exploits a swirl of the fashionable coq feathers—these in the sapphire blue of the bodice.

The alliance of the fancy weaves, such as cloky, with plain materials, which is illustrated by this model, is one which has established an empire over both frocks and wraps. A number of autumn frocks start out with a cloky or matelasse foundation, over which appears a draped tunic of plain crêpe reaffirmed again on the bodice in some form of trimming. Anent this trimming, one must speak again of the popularity of the shoulder strap. Place plain crêpe straps upon a contrasting cloky bodice and you have one of the effective trimming touches of the autumn.

"At the left almond green cloky trimm appliqued is found beside another cloky plain white satin and embroidered in g mauve crepe is stitched in silk of darker bands and a border design in the fabric e fabric. That cloky will also play a stell smart gilet of white cloky printed in gre of brown challaine. Next, a blazer in the drape in this domain; a gray slip-on skirt of gray crepe de chine and with m toward matching found in sports clothes; black proves the charm of the bertha fini bons witnesses the vogue of "port-hole" with white skirt of printed eponge.

The boldly printed silk frock trimmed with bands of plain material—here is the most insistent fashion message of the summer. Needless to say, the theme has been extended to blouses, and in the center of the page we find a brilliant model of mauve silk with Chinese design in red, blue, and green. Bands of plain white satin fulfil the inevitable conditions and a border design of blue, green, and red, which forms part of the

The blouse, like the bathing suit, is eternally susceptible to every bacilli of the mode. Naturally enough, therefore, it has caught the drape. Many of the new imports show, in fact, the one sided, caught up effects which prevail so widely in frocks and coats And, like these other two, the draped blouse often makes use of some handsome ornament to negotiate the fastening.

This draped influence is found even in the smart blazer which women will continue to wear through the next two months of country and resort life. We encounter it here in a black and red stripe flannel model, which is allied with a smartly cut white skirt of wash material—and, by the way, the cotton wash skirt has been featured by all the fashionable resorts this summer to the neglect of the silk model—and topped off by a white felt hat trimmed with a cluster of red fruit.

The drape is not the only fashion microbe contracted by this sensitive garment, the blouse. As everybody knows, the little separate jacket has shared with the printed frock the honor of being the most spectacular feature of fashionable summer dressing. It is not strange, therefore, that the blouse designer has tried to steal from this mode some of its thunder.

Nowadays one finds, indeed, dozens of blouses built on coatee or jacket lines. To this hybrid is given the name of jacquette. The jacquette assumes various forms, but it is true to the coat tradition of opening down the front or side. Sometimes it has short sleeves, sometimes long. Sometimes it takes on the look of a box coat and frequently it is bloused into the familiar fitted hip band. For these jacquettes all manner of cloky, matelasse, printed and embroidered effects are sought, and the fact of it is that a jacquette constructed of one of these materials might successfully follow the lines of the blazer just described.

Many of the stunning new autumn suits are mere showmen dedicating their lives to the display of some stunning gilet. And what gilets are made from these new blistered and pebbled and wrinkled fabrics! In the center of the page we show how a simple little suit of brown effaces itself in behalf of a gilet blouse of white cloky with a printed design in red and green brightening collar and border. The arrangement of the coat belt under that little tab of blouse material is particularly new and striking. The suit, by the way, is made of the new material challaine, which is a cross between Kasha and broadcloth.

The influence of ribbons is indicated second from the right by a crêpe blouse in mauve banded in ribbons of contrasting color and otherwise significant because of the oval pieces cut from the shoulder and the top of the arm. As to the sway of the deep bertha capelet collar so widely observed in the summer gowns, we find testimony to this in the periwinkle blue crêpe model stitched in black thread worn by the seated figure on the wall.

The remaining models are the white tailored batiste blouse at the right, which tops a skirt of white eponge with figured border design in red and blue; the sweater blouse of crêpe trimmed with embroidery in darker tone encountered third from the left, and last comes that costume which is the backbone of summer and autumn resort wear—the slip on sweater with skirt and hosiery to match. Such an outfit as this has frequently been carried out in gray this summer and when completed by a vivid red hat such as is shown here there is certainly nothing in better taste than this simple gray Shetland slip over, with its Irish lace collar and cuffs and its plaited skirt of gray crêpe.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

THE CAPE'S THE THING.

By Mary Brush Williams.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—I have a friend who is an American buyer, and she is here now. I always love to ask her for her impressions because they are so keen and sensitive. What does she see that is predominating over last year and what does she think will last?

Soft footedly I steal up on her with a question, trying to take her off her guard when she isn't looking—and why, by the way, is it such an enormous secret—what is she buying for America? I got her once! Evidently the floors of our tearooms and dance halls are still to be sanded with the loose beads which our dresses have shed. She is buying beaded tunics galore, and always when possible with a flare in them, so that they can fall over a straight tunic, leaving us our favorite pillowslip of a silhouette, while acknowledging the flare.

For the rest, she loves the present use of white, wafting out in clouds and streamers from silhouettes blocked in black—and the silver linings to the somberest of costumes, with touches of it on the outside of the dress, and the hat entirely made of it. You see, it gives lightness and the becoming bright colors, while keeping a certain conservatism that goes with dark costuming for the street. There are lots of yellows and every yellow under the sun that runs into dust color. Chocolate brown is the roast beef medium of the autumn tints.

Peonies are used on hats and feathers made to look like peonies—you had one of them in an illustration for last week. On a big felt hat, for instance, there will be a large peony at one side. Do you remember the water lily epoch of the geologic history of styles? Only yourselves can say whether the peony will also make history.

There is always somewhere round every costume a touch of fur. Of course, we know the French woman does not go forth without something round her neck, and usually a good big fox or stole—not the slim length of a little lean, brown animal.

Short paisley coats are getting recognition, and for the moment there are lots of big organdie hats. On tailored suits there is wool and bead embroidery. And red and orange feathers are used on a lot of hats—it makes one think of the pictures of Louis XIV.'s time, with their red and orange plumes. Those are the features the American buyer has noted.

Cape Made of Waving Lines of Fur in Black and White. | Cape of Orange Taffeta with Train on One Side and Collar of Breasts of Gulls. | Dress of White Crepe Embroidered Around Belt and Shown Inside Cape of Brocaded Materials. | Cape of Poison Green Chiffon Descending in Points and with Stiff Collar.

On my own, I should like to report that belts are still wide, many of them, and flat and beaded; and they are worn, so far, at whatever altitude you prefer. A new dress insidiously working its way into the foreground is in the hobble movement with a bandage usually of black satin, drawing tightly, as part of a drapery, across the knees in the back. It is so useful as a walk skirt, as you can perhaps remember from tha last period when it was with us, just before the war. Anyway, it is awfully pretty and becoming to our American figures.

As another, disconnected piece of information, don't "scramble" your furs this fall, but give each kind a showing separately. Astrakhan would be popular over here, except there is not enough of it. At any rate, anybody with any on hand is playing it hard. It is uncompromising next the face, I think, but the bright linings help to save it, and the French have a way of lining the under half of the collar with the bright color of silk or crepe, and that helps the face along. Sometimes a string of monkey fur round the edge of it is a little softening, but monkey fur is all but shelved. A woman with a handsome astrakhan cape wished it made over into another long one, but had to end by trimming a cloth coat with it, because she could not get any to match.

The first cape shows one of the important tendencies of the day for both furs and materials to run in permanent waves. Leonora Hughes wore this smart cape, consisting of small stripes of black and white fur on a chiffon foundation. You know how they make them up for summer without one calorie of heat in them. A woman has one of broken marten tails that looks as if it could weather the arctic, and she almost freezes in it of a Paris evening.

When capes employ the permanent wave they usually swing free in silhouette and without any tricks of movement, in order to give the waves a full showing, and so this one goes. The dress under it is of yellow crepe georgette descending into many small, pointed streamers, and it is completely studded in beads of the same color. Leonora Hughes, you know, is the dancing partner of Maurice.

The second cape is of orange taffeta, and the thing to note about it is the uneven hem line, which shoots off into a train on one side only. The collar is particularly interesting because it is made of gray, shimmery satin breasts of gulls. Each of them is edged with taffeta. The gown underneath is of raspberry crepe studded with white beds, and it has two side trains.

The third shows a Poiret silhouette with a simple white crepe gown embroidered in Marocain design in silver at the belt. The manteau consists of yards and yards of gorgeous silver and black and gray lame, lined with fuchsia pink georgette crepe. The collar, which is like a scarf, is of the same color and material. The huge emerald pendant which the lady is wearing gives the costume great elegance as well as chic.

One of the most billowy, blowy, spirit of the sprite evening capes I have seen this late summer is the fourth one of poison green chiffon that falls in layers of points which overlap one another. The stiff standing collar of the green gives a certain verve to it, and if you can arrange to have bright yellow hair you will show it off to advantage.

One of the smartest of the fur coats has a silhouette that is all but tight fitting, and sleeves go into a cape across the back. Capes are used a lot for trimmings, but except for evening do not give indications of flourishing as such this fall.

1454—Woman's and misses' apron. Sizes 16 years and 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 36 inch material.

1441—Child's dress. Sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. Size 4 requires 2 yards of 36 inch material.

How to Use the Patterns

THE long lines of the overdress of pattern No. 1445, make it particularly appropriate for a woman with a full figure. It is also a becoming design for a slender figure. There is a one piece skirt that is to be joined to the lower edge of the underwaist. This underwaist closes in the middle front, but the skirt should have the placket set in the left side seam of the skirt.

The vest is attached to the underwaist on the right side, and is fastened to the left side of the underwaists with snaps.

The overdress is cut in two pieces—front and back. There are perforations on both back and front, showing where each piece is to be slashed in at the waist line, beginning at the under arm seam edge and cutting along line of perforations there. The skirt part is then gathered, and the fullness adjusted so that the seam edges will be even—making one continuous line from the armhole to the bottom of the skirt part.

Of course, too deep a seam must be avoided in this gathering. Start at the armhole with a three-eighth inch seam, and as the gathers near the finishing point the seam must run off to nearly nothing. The upper edge of the slash is gathered to position also, and a little stay belt comes with the pattern that is used to stitch over and cover these gatherings. After this has been finished, the under arm and shoulder seams are put together.

The collar extends into front facings that extend to the lower edge of the overdress. The sleeves may be long or short, and are sewed into the overdress.

If one of the beautiful delicate grays is becoming, nothing would be lovelier than that color in a crêpe. The entire dress may be made of one color, with a tiny piece of lovely lace showing just above the top of the vest, and a lace collar worn over the dress collar.

Pattern No. 1441 is a charming design for a child's dress. It may be used equally well for a dressy one or for one of those dear little wash dresses.

The short waist fastens down the back, and to this is attached the one piece, straight gathered skirt. There are perforations on the collar showing just where and how far it is to be sewed to the dress. There are two sleeve patterns—one is a full length one, gathered into a wrist band; the other a short one, gathered top and bottom.

Taffeta, crêpe, organdie or challis would make up prettily, and if the material will allow, make tiny straight ruffles and sew to the outer edge of the surplice collar. At the underarm seams this collar is attached to sash ends that tie in the middle back, and the ruffles could stop at the underarm seams. Use the same sort of ruffle as a finish to the short sleeves.

Chambray or gingham would make wonderfully pretty dresses, and the ruffles could be of organdie, or some contrasting color, but the same material. Shrink the wash materials before using, and when hung up to dry after being washed, do not hang in the sun or wind. Take down as soon as dry always, as beating about in the wind and sun ruins the colors.

Pattern No. 1454 is cleverly cut. It is all in one piece, and the skirt at the under arm seam extends straight out, so as to allow more fullness over the hips when it is gathered and brought back to position. It is designed for a house dress or apron, and is to be slipped on over the head.

The front is cut down at the neck in the middle and the opening faced and rolled back to form revers. Joined to these revers is a small sailor collar. Two pieces are cut for the collar and one for each side of the revers facings. Seam lines must be clearly marked with a tracing wheel. Then one of the collar pieces is sewed to the neck of the dress all the way around, letting the seam come to the inside. The revers or facings are sewed across the upper ends to the collar, having these seams come to the inside also. Then the right side of the collar and facings are laid to the right side of the other stitched piece and dress opening and stitched in a seam from one end to the other. The attached section is then turned right side out over the other, and the opposite edge hemmed down over the seam.

LACE A CANTILEVER SHOE AND

it conforms to your foot. Pulling the laces makes the shoe hug the instep with a firm, restful support. As you tighten the strings, the under-arch sole is drawn up until it meets the foot and fits the curve of the arch. The Cantilever Shoe, therefore, supports the foot at every point and relieves the muscles of all strain.

The Cantilever Shoe FLEXES with the foot and permits the muscles to exercise with every step. A stiff-soled shoe, or a metal appliance, binds the muscles, restricts their movement, and weakens their vitality by stopping circulation. But Cantilever Shoes prevent and correct fallen arches because they exercise and strengthen the muscles surrounding the bones of the arch.

All guesswork eliminated; every shoe is now fitted by X-Ray without extra charge to you.

Genuine Cantilever Shoes have the name "CANTILEVER" stamped on the shank. Avoid substitutes.

Cantilever Shoes are a boon to people who grow weary from walking or being on their feet for long hours. For Cantilevers have a natural inner sole line that encourages correct poise, a proper balance of weight, an easy, tireless carriage.

That First Love Affair

What was your "puppy love" affair? Can you tell it now without a wrench at the heart—with a laugh, say? If so—

The Tribune will pay $5 for each story published on "My Puppy Love Story." Write on one side of the paper and make your story brief. Address "Puppy Love" Editor The Tribune, Chicago.

TRAGEDY AT 13.

HIS hair was black and it stuck out from his head, here and there, in greasy wisps like the end of a drenched rooster's tail. His wrinkled suit matched in color the grayed yellow of his anemic complexion. With a helpless but patient expression he stood in our hallway waiting for his wife to return from the kitchen, whence she had gone to heat a bottle of milk. The intended recipient of the milk he clutched in one hand, upside down, in the nape of the neck fashion in which cats carry their kittens. The other hand hovered helplessly along the wailing infant's back, trying evidently to find another clutching place.

Never have I seen a man, bachelor, grandfather, uncle, or otherwise, hold a baby in such an awkward, ridiculous position. Yet he must have held six others in the same fashion, for there had been six others in the family.

This was the judicrous picture which completely blasted all that remained of my first love affair. A puppy affair, I suppose it was, though I dislike even now to have such youthful fervor and devotion belittled by such a title. One sided it certainly was, for never in his student pastorhood of the little church where he preached his first sermons did he dream of the pathetic idolization with which I regarded him.

He was 23. I was 13. Ten years' difference. Would he wait for me? Would he even notice me? Did his heart feel anything of the palpitating thrill which mine did when I met him on the street or listened to him from the pulpit? Evidently not, for he barely noticed me at all except occasionally to give an impartial and professional handshake.

Sunday after Sunday I attended church with a regularity which alarmed my parents, who could not connect my Sunday saintliness with my week day pettishness. I always sat in a front pew feasting my eyes on the physical perfection of his slender carriage. His hair was black and marcelled. His eyes were black, also, and flashing. The deep tones of his voice thrilled me with an ecstasy which no one who has never been through the thrill of a first and impossible love can know.

He was an artist, too, and between sermons and weddings and funerals he painted portraits of various members of the congregation. Here was the combination of artist and laymen for which my soul yearned—but he would never wait for me! He was ten years older than I. The tragedy of it.

Then came the greater tragedy. We moved away. Shortly after some friends from the old town visited us. I have loved since, more or less puppishly. I have known the tragedy of disillusionment and a returned ring, but I have had no tragedy in my life as yet, no blackness of dispair to equal that which I felt when our friends casually remarked that the idol of my dreams had just become engaged.

In my diary I find these words written on that evening: "Diary, I will close your pages forever. What more can there be to write after this."

Some weeks afterward I read of his wedding. It was by the kitchen sink where I had been washing dishes. Going out to the back porch where my family could not see, I clenched my fists and vowed that I never would marry.

With the idealization which years always brings to absent loved ones, he had still kept the almost unearthly perfection which my childish mind had endowed him until last summer on a vacation trip. He and his family visited at our home. My first glimpses of him was the one which I have given you.

LOVE LETTERS

The Tribune will pay $3 for every love letter published. So, if you can write a good one, or if you have one in your private or family possessions you would like to see in the paper, send it to Love Letter Editor, The Sunday Tribune, Chicago. As no letters will be returned, send copies of the ones you wish to retain possession of.

"THOSE WHO WALK IN PRIDE."

DEAR ONE: You'll never know until I have passed on what you meant to me in those dear days of my past. To tell you now would only cause unhappiness to others, and do us no good, but it is a relief to set down on paper that which has been shut up in my heart all these years.

I cannot understand now how I could have thrown my happiness away as I did, so carelessly and unthinking. I deliberately turned my back on love.

You did not know—you could not—my actions toward you so belied my heart that your presence gave me utter contentment. Your conversation was always interesting to me, no matter what the topic, and when your talk turned to more intimate and personal affairs and your eyes were searching mine I was so afraid the choking sensations in my throat and the light in my eyes would betray me, so afraid that I'd surrender too easily, that I downed the emotions and pretended indifference.

Always I pretended indifference at those times; how lightly and carelessly I could laugh and turn the conversation back into safer channels. I thought I was so wise—and I was so silly!

As I look back on it all now, with the perspective of years to clarify my vision, I think the reason I was afraid to let you know my love was because I had been trained to be overmodest, oversensitive, timid and shy, and that dazzling glimpse of my own love frightened me. I couldn't believe you loved me that much.

And while I was longing to give myself to you and aching to have you take me, in spite of myself, I was afraid I might sacrifice my independence and my pride if I encouraged your advances in the least or met you half way, so I held myself aloof, and you at last grew tired of my coldness and left me.

O, why didn't you see, and make me give up my false pride? For many days after you left me that last time I saw no faces on the street—only the mental image of you! But I have never seen you since you said good-by that day, and perhaps it is best for us both. They tell me you are happily married now. I, too, am happily married and love my husband dearly, but great love comes but once. YVONNE.

Treating Skin Blemishes

by Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Sky on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat busted or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

NEW YORK, — [Special Correspondence.]—Of all the ills the flesh is heir to or acquires by unhygienic ways of living, I do not believe there is a single item which causes more actual unhappiness and mental torture than a blemished complexion. Almost any one can laugh and be fat; be fearfully skinny and laugh with her tormentors; lose a few handfuls of hairs and be terrified yet still able to extract a smile over the remaining ones. But for a young person whose skin is marred with acne, blackheads, or pimples there is nothing but abject misery.

Time after time girls, and boys, too, write me they are ashamed to go out because of poor complexions. A pity when, with the exception of a few rare cases, it is something that may be remedied, and in comparatively short time. In fact, ninety-nine cases out of a hundred may be prevented by the simplest precautions, for the most part the free and generous application of nothing more complicated than soap and water and, as grandma used to say, "elbow grease."

The Root of the Evil.

There are some fortunate persons with that quality of skin so finegrained that blackhead trouble escapes them entirely, and consequently pimple and acne conditions. Few, however, may lay claim to a spotless reputation as far as blackheads are concerned. At one time or another they have had to face the disfiguring comedones and apply a few extra measures to make good their departure.

In treating all three of the most frequent complexion ills, you may boil your energy down to an attack upon those blackheads already imbedded and on their prevention. Because pimples and acne are really nothing more or less than an inflammation of the sebaceous glands and hair follicles, the tiny comedone being the root of the evil of inflammation.

Prevail During Adolescence.

If the skin is kept free from blackheads, which usually begin to make their appearance on the face at the most self-conscious age, the humiliation and mental distress would be reduced to almost nothing.

Blackheads are masses of fat and debris of the skin which have solidified in the glands. These masses act as foreign bodies, irritate the skin, and become infected and then inflamed.

Most frequently the face is chiefly affected. Again, the face, back, shoulders, and chest are troubled. If treatment is not given early, there is great danger of scars from prolonged inflammation; at any rate, enlarged pores will result which give the same pitted effect to the face.

The prevalence of acne during adolescence is due to the fact that at that time the fat glands, like the hair follicles, take on a new activity. The secretion of fat is greatly increased, and it requires only a slight disturbance of the function to cause the accumulation of fat in the glands and the formation of blackheads.

Persons with coarse pores and large fat glands have the worst cases of acne.

Face Most Troubled.

Conditions of the general health influence the development of this trouble. Not infrequently is it found associated with cold hands and feet, and not uncommonly with dyspepsia and constipation, or other irregularities which lower the vigor and impair the resistance.

The face is most troubled because it is the most exposed part of the body and because sweat glands are abundant there and are easily choked with dust and grime, which add to the disfigurement.

With normally healthy people, then, it is a matter of local care almost exclusively. If the circulation is good, the digestion good, and elimination regular, you may pin your faith on the flesh brush, soap, and water.

The vigor with which you scrub is determined by the condition of the skin. A thin and dry skin will perhaps be less affected, but will require care to prevent an unduly dry or chapped condition. In severe blackhead trouble, however, if the skin is greasy and thick, there is little danger of scrubbing too vigorously. Treat daily with one good scrubbing with warm water, good soap, and a rough washcloth or flesh brush—preferably the latter, with moderately stiff bristles.

Before scrubbing apply a good cleansing cream, allow it to remain until absorbed, then wipe off. The oil in the cream penetrates the hard masses in the pores and helps in the evacuation. Now for the warm water and soap, followed by a warm water rinse to remove all soap and grease, a rinse in cold water, and finally an alcohol sponge, which completes the cleansing process; or give an ice rub to the pores and tone the skin.

Better than Cosmetics.

I have a letter from a girl whom I advised some time ago to follow these directions. She gives me a most wholehearted indorsement of the efficacy and simplicity of this treatment. She tells me she spent a prodigious amount of money on cosmetics advertised to cure blackheads and was even lured into sending to Paris for a cream which claimed magic properties. After one month of my treatment she boasts a flawless skin for the first time in years.

This washing process gets rid of extraneous dirt and at the same time removes micro-organisms and prevents the infection that produces acne lesions. Hot water and soap reduce the excessive amount of fat in glands and scrubbing removes the thick layer of epidermis that is usually present. Consequently the fat glands are given an opportunity to discharge upon the skin as they should. Remember, this cleansing process can hardly be overdone for a greasy skin.

If the blackheads refuse to yield to scrubbing, press them out, just a few at a time, or the skin will look raw. There are tiny comedone extractors sold for this purpose, but you may use the fingers, covered with a clean handkerchief. If the mass does not come out with moderate pressure, let it alone until the next day. After removing the blackheads wipe the face with alcohol or a solution of hydrogen peroxide. A light massage with cream will stir up the circulation and smooth out the irritated spot so that on the morrow there will be no marks.

Removing the Aggravation.

If pimples have developed, open them with a needle sterilized by dipping in alcohol or peroxide. Take pus up carefully with fresh absorbent cotton which has been dipped in the alcohol. Dip needle in the peroxide or alcohol before opening each pimple, and open but one or two at a time to prevent an irritated skin. Then wipe the entire face with alcohol to prevent the spread of infection.

The following acne cream is excellent for pimples which have become aggravated. In such cases it is advisable to forego the scrubbing with brush and soap and water for the first week, using a good cleansing cream to remove the dirt. Then apply the acne cream with a light massage, wiping off the excess, but allowing some of it to become absorbed:

Lanolin, 5 grams; sweet almond oil, 5 grams; precipitate of sulphur, 5 grams; oxide of zinc, 2½ grams; extract of violet, 10 drops. If the case is extreme, use cream night and morning. After a week or ten days you may begin with the good old soap and water remedy as outlined for the prevention and remedy of blackheads, the most universal, perhaps, of all beauty ills.

Lyford was terribly frightened when two small dogs gave him a most vociferous greeting.

"Never mind," said we, "they won't hurt you—they only want to make you welcome."

"Well—well—anyway, they've got quite a lot of pep, haven't they?" he sobbed. B. E. S.

Jane came in to see me one day and I asked her if her small brother Edward was cutting his teeth.

She replied: "No, but he's tuttin' his hairs." M. F. G.

Robin likes an evening drive with his Uncle Jim. The other evening he made an early call on his uncle, under strict orders not to ask to be taken driving.

"Uncle Jim," he inquired presently, "are you going out in your car tonight?"

"Why do you want to know, Robin?" asked his uncle.

"So I can go home and get my sweater," he answered ingratiatingly. I. V. B.

Company came about 7:30 and Betty was put to bed. She did so want to talk to the company. Every now and then her voice piped up with a question or a bit of information. Mother spoke to her two or three times telling her to go to sleep.

Finally she said, "Now, Betty, if you don't go to sleep I'll have to come and do something you won't like."

There was silence for a time and then in an aggrieved tone came, "Well, mother, can't I stay awake till I go to sleep?" H. H.

One day this summer at a party, Lucile was asked why she had on long stockings instead of socks like the other children.

She answered, "I got my knees all chipped, so mama had to cover 'em up." A. J. S.

David came to his mother in the throes of humiliation with the plea: "Please, muvver, can't I go barefooted? I'm the only shoefooted boy on the street." J. P.

There have been four girls born into our locality in the last three months, and when Steven heard of the last one he could contain his disgust no longer, and broke out with: "Gee, I'm tired of all these girls. I wish we could live in a man neighborhood." G. C.

When Billy came from the park he described various animals.

"And," said he, "I saw some snakes, too!"

"Have snakes got tails?" I asked.

"Yes," said the child. "They got tails, and that's all they have got." C. C.

"Mother, Why Not Try the Newer Form of Iron

And Be Strong and Well and Have Nice Rosy Cheeks Instead of Being Nervous and Irritable All the Time and Loking So Haggard and Old?",

The doctor gave some to Susie Smith's mother and she was worse off than you are and now she looks just fine." There can be no healthy, beautiful, rosy cheeked women without iron. Good physicians have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors should prescribe more of the newer form of iron—Nuxated Iron—for their nervous, run-down, weak, haggard-looking patients. When the iron goes from the blood of women the roses go from their cheeks, and strength and vitality from their bodies. This newer form of iron, like the iron in your blood and like the iron in certain green vegetables, is highly recommended to thousands who wish quickly to increase their strength, power and endurance. It is surprising how many people suffer from iron deficiency and do not know it. Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it, no matter how much or what you eat, your food merely passes through you without doing you the proper amount of good. You don't get the strength out of it, and as a consequence you become weak, pale, and sickly-looking, just like a plant trying to grow in soil deficient in iron.

You can tell the women with plenty of iron in their blood—beautiful, healthy, rosy-cheeked women, full of life, vim and vitality. You can get Nuxated Iron from any druggist under an absolute guarantee that it will do the same for you or your money back.

Pompeian Beauty Powder

Romance hovers near

ENRAPTURED, he gazes at the splendor of her beauty in the golden light of the summer noon. She always has the same delicacy of skin, the same clear flush of youth, for she possesses the secret of Instant Beauty—the complete "Pompeian Beauty Toilette."

First, a touch of fragrant Pompeian DAY Cream (vanishing). It softens the skin and holds the powder. Work the cream well into the skin so the powder adheres evenly. Then apply Pompeian BEAUTY Powder. It makes the skin beautifully fair and adds the charm of delicate fragrance. Now a touch of Pompeian BLOOM for youthful color. Do you know that a bit of color in the cheeks makes the eyes sparkle with a new beauty? Lastly, dust over again with the powder, in order to subdue the bloom. Presto! The face is beautified and youth-i-fied in an instant! (Above 3 preparations may be used separately or together. At all druggists, 50c each.)

TRY NEW POWDER SHADES. The correct powder shade is more important than the color of dress you wear. Our new NATURELLE shade is a more delicate tone than our Flesh shade, and blends exquisitely with a medium complexion. Our new RACHEL shade is a rich cream tone for brunettes.

Announcing a New Division to Our Regular Corset Department

For the scientific fitting of corsets to correct conditions to which women are subject.

Dedicated to the Betterment of Womanhood

Specially designed garments for the support of the abdomen and for wear after operation or maternity.

Mr. C. Herbert Johnston has, after years of scientific research, designed the Perfecto Health Corset, a patented garment which supports the abdominal and pelvic cavities in a perfectly natural way and at the same time gives grace and comfort to the wearer.

The Perfecto Health Corset here pictured has a scientific non-elastic inner belt which when applied exerts an inward and upward pressure gently but firmly raising and supporting the abdomen, insuring better health to the wearer.

Perfecto Health Corset is the one garment for women who have large and fatty abdomen and relieving dragging feeling.

Mr. Johnston is a recognized expert and is here to help women. He will hold interviews during store hours and has a corps of expert fitters of his own training. All women are invited to accept this service, which is free. The Perfecto Corset is recommended.

Practical and Fancy Needlework

BY CLOTILDE

Problems that puzzle the home sewer will be answered in this column or by mail if a stamped, addressed envelope is inclosed. Address Clotilde, The Chicago Tribune.

COVERLETS FOR BABY.

COVERLETS for the baby that may be used in the carriage or bed are made of unbleached muslin the usual size. In cutting, an allowance must be made for turning in on all four sides and for the batting that is put in, which makes a slight difference in the finished measure.

On the outside there is a border of checked gingham, and besides this there are gay little colored figures sometimes appliqued over the surface. This part of the work should be done before putting the coverlet together. A line may be traced around the muslin, showing the finished edge all around and the outer edge of the gingham be basted on so it comes just inside this. Miter the corners of the border and baste and stitch carefully. If unevenly or otherwise carelessly done, anything of this kind looks bad.

The edges of the under side of the coverlet are basted down over the edge of the interlining, and then the edges of the upper side are turned in, basted in place, and stitched all around. This is surely an inexpensive thing, and yet it may be made most attractive and useful. It would make an acceptable gift and perhaps would be a new idea to many mothers.

To go with this one may make slip-on covers for baby's pillow of a small checked flaxon or batiste, leaving it open at both ends and having it quite a little longer than the pillow. Set above the hem at each end is a border of the checked gingham. If one has time there are attractive articles without number to make that cost but little.

Answers to Sewing Questions.

MISS A. R. M.—Capes and cape coats are both much worn, and one of the most beautiful materials for these wraps is silk velette. It comes in beautiful colors, is light in weight, and wonderfully soft looking.

* * *

MRS. B. D.: Yes, indeed, gingham in the pin checks is used a great deal for handkerchiefs—some are round, others square, and a dainty bit of embroidery in one corner is usually found. The edge of the handkerchief may be rolled or laid in a narrow, flat hem.

* * *

MRS. J. B. R.: If you will write to the circulation department of the paper, enclosing 10 cents, the part of the paper having the initial that you wish to copy will be sent to you.

A Friend in Need

By Sally Joy Brown

When information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send parcels to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

Readings for Students.

"Have any of you readings—humorous, dramatic—suitable for a high school speaking contest? It is impossible for me to find anything desirable in the library of my town. I would appreciate this kindness.

"Y. C. V. L."

Any reader who can assist this young woman will confer a favor by writing for her address.

Difficult to Carry.

"I wonder if there is some one among your thousands of readers, who has a folding go-cart to give me. My baby is 9 months old and has been delicate since his birth. I find it difficult to carry him wherever I go. Although we have a carriage for him, we live on the third floor and it exhausts me to wheel the carriage up and down when I want to go out. A folding go-cart would help me to give him more fresh air and sunshine. He doesn't get much of it now.

"MRS. C. A. P."

Truly, you do need a go-cart, and I sincerely hope some mother whose baby has outgrown his or hers will send to me for your address and send it along to you.

Offers Wheel Chair.

"If you have a request for a wheel chair, I have one no longer needed and will pass it on. MRS. M. D. N."

Thank you. Any application received shall be forwarded to you.

Making Her Work Easier.

"May I make a request through your valuable corner? I would appreciate a washing machine and wringer if there is some one who has one to pass along to help make my work easier. I have seven children—the oldest 15 years—and you can readily see what my laundry is. MRS. E. P."

With so many apartment hotels getting our families, there must be washing machines rusting away. I hope you are fortunate in procuring one.

A Bed for Baby.

"I am to have a year old baby to care for. I would appreciate the loan or gift of a child's bed and would agree to return it to owner after the child needs it no longer. This is my first request for help and I assure you I would not make it if I could buy a bed for the little dear. I. C."

This is being published with the hope that the mother of a sturdy little chap who has outgrown his bed will assist you.

Investigate Rag Bags.

"I am in need of colored gingham pieces to finish a patch quilt. Do you suppose some of your readers might have such pieces? MRS. M. L."

Any rag bags to come to the aid of this industrious quilter?

Keeping Boys in Clothes.

"I wonder if you could help me to get some clothing for my two boys? I am a widow and find it hard to keep the boys in clothes. They are 12 and 16. I would be grateful if you can help me. MRS. B. R."

Boys have a way of coming through their clothes. I hope this request receives speedy answers.

Offers a Dictionary.

"Some time ago some one asked for a dictionary. I have one to give.

"H. B. Y."

Here is an opportunity for an ambitious person to procure a dictionary.

Comfort for Invalid.

"Will some one kindly give or loan a discarded wheel chair to a poor crippled girl of 10 years, who has never walked, and is too heavy to be carried. She would enjoy getting out of doors.

"MRS. J."

There usually are answers to an appeal similar to this, and I hope the readers have not disposed of all their wheel chairs.

The Value of Charcoal

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, and after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in

STUART'S Charcoal Lozenges

They are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being sweetened to be smooth and palatable.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit.

Many physicians advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat. Charcoal is also believed to greatly benefit the liver. These lozenges cost but thirty cents a box at drug stores, and you get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

DOUBLE S. & H. STAMPS TILL NOON

Born in September

You Should Marry

says Doris Blake—

If you were born in September, or, to be more astronomically correct, under Virgo, which covers the dates between Aug. 22 and Sept. 21, you have an extremely strong love nature and, consequently, yours is one greatly affected by marriage. You do not enter matrimony in any light and airy manner. It is a serious matter with you. Therefore, the zodiacal sign charges you to take pains about the selection of a life partner, for you are so constituted as not to be able to throw off disagreements which may arise.

Your minds are fine and discriminating in all departments of life. You are apt to be peculiar about your diet. You crave foods in harmony with the laws of hygiene. Discord or inharmony affects you even to the point of destroying your appetite. You want things tasty, nice, and elegant.

Your love is natural, pure, and devoted, so that it amounts almost to worship. There are no women more truly devoted than those born in this sign. Virgo, your ruling sign, is that of the Virgin, or purity. So you require for a perfectly harmonious life one who appreciates these fine principles.

The relationship which is best enabled to meet, with your demands, so the stars say, is with one born either a Taurus (April 19 to May 20) or one born under the zodiacal sign of Capricorn (Dec. 21 to Jan. 20).

The Taurus born are most adaptable to any circumstances of life into which they are thrown. Their natural attitude is that of a lover. Their senses are keenly alive, are lighted and of joyous spirits, and sorrow passes them lightly by. They are the most loyal of friends, but are inclined to dominate the relationship. They are easily controlled through their sympathies, however. A nice reserve contributes to their charm of manner. They are fitted to hold positions where dignity and reliability are of vital necessity. Their will power is tremendous. As a rule, their health is a sturdy variety.

Persons born under Capricorn are proud, independent, and high minded and have a deep, fine interior nature, an extremely high ideal of love, harmony, beauty, and social excellence. They take responsibility seriously. They are philanthropic, and have a deep sympathy and a love of doing good beyond what would be expected of them. Their determined nature carries them on to success. They never act on impulse nor are they overdemonstrative, being generally cool headed and deliberate. They are highly magnetic, however, and people are attracted to them without effort on their part. They show their real worth and will arise to any emergency when acting under responsibility.

October and June are heralded as the luckiest months for Virgo born to wed in. Anything started in October or June should turn out successfully, according to star lore. February, April, and August are the least lucky months, it is claimed.

Blue and black are said to be the lucky colors for the Virgo person. Your lucky birthstone, the jasper.

There is a tradition about Virgo persons that they are likely to meet with gain through their marriages.

Real Love Stories

Do you know a real love story—one that is stranger than fiction? It is the kind that is wanted. No attention will be paid to literary style. The Tribune will pay $5 for every story published. No manuscripts returned. Address Doris Blake, The Tribune, Chicago.

IN THE WAKE OF A LIE.

WHEN Jack and I were married we never knew that anything could come between us and wreck our happiness the way it did. I had quite a sum of money I had inherited from a relative. We were married three weeks when my husband's sister came to me and asked a loan of $1,000 to help out her parents, as she said they would lose their home if they could not borrow that amount of money somewhere. I gave her the money, suspecting nothing. She asked me not to tell her brother about it. But I thought it was my duty to tell him any of his parents' debts. When I did he grew white with rage and said it was all a lie; that his parents were not in danger of losing their home. He took me to see them and they both denied any such trouble, but said the daughter had left home the night before.

It was quite a while before we could find her, but when we did she denied I had loaned her any money. When I showed her the canceled check she paid her brother I had paid her that amount to insure her silence on an affair I was conducting with another man.

It was all a lie, and I thought my husband would unhesitatingly believe me after what his sister had done already. But he faltered and I flew into a rage, and told him if he believed his sister, he shouldn't return to me until he no longer doubted my story. My grandmother tried to patch things up, but he was as obstinate as I was about it, and we drifted farther apart. Then a few weeks later grandmother's health failed and I took her to a southern town. This change removed me from my husband definitely and he sued me for divorce on grounds of desertion.

A few weeks later grandmother died. Her will left what estate she had to me and my husband. My attorney advised me to consult him. I wrote saying I wanted to see him. He came to the hotel where I was staying and met me with considerable embarrassment. He refused to accept any share in my grandmother's estate, saying he had no right to take it in view of the fact that he had married again.

Both of us struggled to keep down our emotions, but we could not repress the grief which we felt in our mistakes, and before we realized what we were doing we were telling each other of our love. We did not speak of the circumstance that had parted us. His sister came to me two days later and broke into tears and begged me to grant her pardon. She said she needed the money to save a man she loved from a prison sentence, and she said she would go through lying, theft, or anything for him. I told her that all she could do was to tell her brother the truth. She confessed to him.

Then he told me he would speak to his wife about the situation, and ask her for the freedom which would permit us to remarry. But I told him to wait until I could see her on some pretext. I did see her, and found that she loves her husband as much as I love him. She is an orphan, and would be left penniless if some arrangement for her support were not made. I did not have the heart to snatch the happiness away from her. I am living alone. I had my chance, and am giving the other woman hers. H. J.

THE POTTERS

ILLUSTRATIONS BY J.H.STREEBEL.

Blue Ribbon Comics

by J. P. McEvoy

PROLOGUE.

A nice, quiet vacation on the farm will do them good, the Potters have decided, and Grandma has invited them to come home with her and get next to nature . . . as a change from the city, where everybody is busy getting next to you. . . so the Potters bundled Grandma into the car with them and drove down, a two days' trip . . . Bill isn't so happy about it, but finally gives in . . . he could think of lots more exciting ways of spending a vacation than this . . . Mamie, too, is a bit disturbed at the prospect of leaving Red all alone in the wicked city . . . working as a life guard, too . . . of course, he promised faithfully he'd be true . . . but how can he, with all those girls hanging around him all the time? . . . how, indeed!

Scene I.—They Arrive at Grandma's.

We will pass over the tour to Grandma's and the experiences the Potters had while camping those two nights on the road . . . we will scarcely refer to their astonishment on awakening, after their first night, to discover they had camped in a farmer's front yard, beside the road, when all the time they thought they were away out in the woods somewhere . . . we will not speak of the curious tourists and neighbors who gathered around to gaze at the rather droll ensemble presented by the Potters maising their morning toilet under these undeniably unusual circumstances . . . nor will we refer to the absentminded manner in which Ma read the guide book to Pa, keeping him on the lookout for mythical white churches, hypothetical bridges beyond which one should bear left, and chimerical schoolhouses at 3-4 or 9.11, as the case might be but never was . . . all of which, needless to say, were on Route 42 or 11, when Pa was trying to follow Route 17 . . . oh, yes, we will not allude to any of these painful subjects, but will allow sufficient time to elapse, after which we will part the curtains and discover the Potters comfortably ensconced in Grandma's little white cottage in the quiet, peaceful town of New Burnside.

"I'd like to dance with her."

GRANDMA (to Bill):
Bring in some wood for the stove and we'll have a nice cup of coffee to warm us up after our trip.

(Grandma has an oil stove, but she has never used it . . . ask her why, and she always tells you about the time Martha Flynn poured some coal oil on the fire to help it along, and the fire reciprocated by blowing Martha out the window and shoving the can up into the ceiling, "where you can see the marks of it to this very day.")

MA (looking around the room):
What did you do with the organ, mother?

GRANDMA (proudly):
I traded it and two hogs and five barrels of apples and a cow for a player piano. (And grandma rushed out and milked the cows.)

PA (opening it up and putting on a roll):
Well, well. Here's a swell piece, "Poet and Peasant." And look, Ma, there's "Ave Maria" and the "Lost Chord" and selections from "Tannhauser."

(Pa plays them all, as well as the Medley of Irish Melodies, "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 6" (the Hungarians must be terribly sick of it by this time), "The Stars and Stripes Forever" (it seems to have been going on that long already), and "Poor Butterfly" (poor, nothing!—served her right; any one could see he was a crook . . . Ma noticed it that night at the opera the very first thing . . . she said it to Pa in almost those words . . . that fellow can't be trusted, she said . . . . you mark my words, he'll deceive that poor little thing . . . and when he did, Ma said, see, just as I told you . . . there's men, for you . . . and she gave Pa a look, as much as to say, don't let me ever catch you carrying on like that . . . Pa acted angry, but inwardly he never was so flattered).

MAMIE (who has browsed into the bookcase and discovered a copy of "Trilby," which probably had been taken away from her mother and hidden long ago):
Gee, look, Ma. Is this the book that they used to say was terrible?

MA (reading title):
Mamie, put that book down this minute. The idea, reading "Trilby."

GRANDMA (from the kitchen):
Just what I used to say to you, remember? But you read it just the same.

MAMIE (to Ma):
Is this supposed to be hot stuff? Say, you ought to have read "Three Soldiers" or "A Story-Teller's Holiday."

BILL (helpfully):
Or "The Sheik," Mame. You tell 'em. (Takes down book from shelf.) Look, here's a copy of it. Waddye know about that! Grandma, have you been reading "The Sheik"?

GRANDMA (coming in from the kitchen, wiping biscuit flour from hands on apron):
"The Sheik"? Why, yes. I heard so much about it I wanted to see what it was all about. Kinda silly, I thought.

MAMIE (defensively):
Why, Grandma, I thought it was thrilling.

GRANDMA (calmly):
Yes, you would. But when you're my age the idea of being dragged around by a caveman won't seem so thrilling. You'll feel more like hitting him over the head with a skillet. I'll bet I'd fetch him one. Well, come and get it or I'll throw it away.

(The Potters adjourn to the table, which, after the country custom, remains set all day every day . . . plenty of chicken, with flour gravy . . . umm . . . hot biscuits, apple butter, grape preserves, plum jelly . . . everything in the middle of the table; if you go hungry, it's your own fault . . . none of your silly little entrées and comical pastries . . . Pa is eating as if he didn't get enough to eat at home . . . Ma is not exactly pleased . . . he might be a little more thoughtful of her . . . what will Grandma think?)

Scene II.—The Ice Cream Supper.

Several days later: There's an ice cream supper on the lawn tonight, near Hudgin's, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid, for the benefit of the church . . . that being the only excitement since she came, Mamie has persuaded Bill to take her . . . she'd almost rather stay home, at that, than have to go with Bill . . . when they arrive, the customers are grouped around the long table, on which several coal oil lamps cast a dubious light . . . the ladies are fluttering around very much excited: No. 9 hasn't come in yet, and the ice cream is on it . . . there seems to be some law against making ice cream in the country . . . must be made in the city, where all the cream and most of the fresh milk is shipped . . .

1ST GIRL (gazing in awe at Mamie—the first long skirt she has seen in years):
Lookit the new style. Well! D'ye like it?

2D GIRL (knowingly):
I seen some like that in the movie at Harrisburg last week. (Hopefully): I bet she's bowlegged or somep'n.

1ST GIRL (immensely relieved):
Prob'ly. Or knockkneed or somep'n.

BILL (to Mamie):
When do we eat?

(Great commotion as No. 9 pulls in and the Five Gallon Freezer is hauled across town by the town drayman, who had great difficulty waking up his horse for the occasion . . . the cream is dished out with huge tablespoons . . . none of your tricky city patented scoopers . . . all you can eat for 5 cents a dish, with huge slices of cake, such as only Mrs. Stites, or Mrs. Yates, or Mrs. O'Brien can make . . .)

BILL (finishing his second dish):
I heard 'em say there's a dance over at Sweet Springs tonight. I wish I had a girl I'd go.

MAMIE (sweetly):
What's the matter with me?

BILL (brotherly):
Everything.

MAMIE (indignantly):
Well, I like that! (Dreamily): Anyway, Red doesn't think so.

BILL (scoffingly):
Huh, Red. He doesn't know you like I do. He oughta see you in the mornings some time or when you got cold cream on your face or when you're having one of your tantrums. Poor simp. He don't know you. (Sadly): I wish I could go to that dance.

MAMIE (suppressing the harsh comebacks . . . she wants to go):
O' c'mon, let's go. Maybe you'll meet some nice girls over there. I'll help you, if I can.

BILL (suspiciously):
Yeh, an' then tell Ma all about it. I know you.

MAMIE (sweetly):
The idea! I wouldn't think of it. (Wheedling): C'mon, let's go.

(Bill finally consents, and goes over to the depot to ask the faithful citizens waiting patiently to welcome the next train where he can get a flivver to take him to Sweet Springs . . . while Mamie chats with the ladies of the Ladies' Aid, who, after figuring the expenses, discover they have made $4.35 toward shingling the church . . . an ice cream supper for opening a dance hall the previous Saturday made $27.55 . . . the Ladies' Aid shake their heads sadly . . . what's the world coming to these days, anyway . . .)

Scene III.—The Country Dance at Sweet Springs.

Sweet Springs is a little summer resort where the principal stock in trade is summer . . . the outdoor dance pavilion is the rendesvous on Saturday night of all the country 'round . . . all the city girls who have come down to spend the summer sit around the benches inside, and all the country lads stand around outside and look at them . . . three or four couples, evidently married, dance dutifully while the Society Syncopators imported from Marion or Jonesboro do their best to play dance music as it's done on the records . . . their success is only moderate . . .

BILL (who had to pay $2 to get in and is now dancing the fourth dance with Mamie):
For the luva mike, can't you find nobody else to dance with you?

MAMIE (giving him a pinch, but smiling sweetly at him for the effect it might have on the solitary young man sitting near by):
Quitcha crabbin'. Everybody's looking at you. Look pleasant, can't you? It's just as hard on me as it is on you.

BILL (smiling at sweet young thing who dances by . . . sweet young thing freezes him):
Say, I'd like to dance with her.

MAMIE (getting a complete inventory with one sweeping look):
I don't see what you see in her . . . O, look at that fellow by the door there. Isn't he good-looking?

BILL (looking him over critically):
Good-looking? Say, if he's good-looking then Henry Ford will be the first president of the Palestine Free State.

TWO DANCES LATER.

BILL (wearily):
Say, gee whizz, can'tcha get nobody to dance with you but me?

MAMIE (angrily):
Waddye want me to do? Go out there in the woods and run one of them down? If they won't come in, what'll I do?

Rattle . . . rattle . . . bump . . . bump.

FOUR DANCES LATER.

BILL (wildly):
Ain't the floor big enough to dance on?

MAMIE (sarcastically):
I've been carrying you around on my feet all evening. No wonder you can't get nobody to dance with you mor'n once.

(It may be remarked that the line of girls sitting around inside is now two deep, and any man who asks for a dance is liable to get killed in the rush.)

SIX DANCES LATER.

(Mamie, who has sat out three dances with the wall, is longing to go home . . . she never knew what the song "All by Myself" was about before . . . if only Red was here . . . what was he doing now? . . . not sitting by himself in a dance hall, that's a cinch . . . probably a million girls around him . . . probably dancing with one now, his arm around her and she looking up into his eyes . . . and now she has her head on his shoulder . . . why did she ever come down here in the country, anyway? . . . thank goodness, here's Bill . . . they can go home . . . Bill's not so happy about it, but finally gives in . . . back in the flivver, over the hills . . . bump . . bump . . . rattle . . rattle . . . bump . . bump . . . bang . . bang . . . rattle . . rattle . . . here comes another . . . rattle . . rattle . . . the love call of the flivver to its mate . . . love . . . how beautiful it is! . . . and a moon shining, too . . . think of riding in the moonlight with a brother . . . what a sinful waste of nature . . . almost as bad as two girls kissing each other . . . home at last, and a special delivery for Mamie from Red . . . wonderful! . . . with snapshots enclosed showing him surrounded by a bevy of beautiful girls in luscious bathing suits . . . O, for the life of a life guard . . . but Mamie, poor Mamie . . . this is indeed the end of a perfectly rotten day . . .)

(And that's that—until next Sunday.)

Snug Little Houses Are Making Way for Dwellings of Old Fashioned Spaciousness

[Davidson & Weiss, architects, Chicago, Ill.]

Anita de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Anita de Campi, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped, addressed envelope for personal reply.

By Anita de Campi.

WHAT is so rare and delightfully charming as an old fashioned house possessed of all the modern requisites which make housekeeping a pleasure? The pendulum of public opinion is swinging back with increasing momentum. The smug, uncompromising, stilted, small city house with excessive war time building costs forced the homebuilder to be satisfied with, and which perforce gave no privacy to any one, is giving way to the more commodious dwelling with its larger rooms and comfortable arrangements where one may pause from daily toil to rest and refresh himself.

Just as the home dressmaker seldom can find a ready made dress pattern which exactly suits her taste, but prefers to take one or several patterns and add her individual touch to them, so the discerning homebuilder gathers ideas from designs here and there, until she has a rather definite idea of just what she wants for her home.

A design offering many interesting suggestions to the home plan seeker, and embodying many worth-while characteristics of a home which has the inviting charm of those of fifty or seventy-five years ago, is that presented herewith. It was designed by Architects Davidson & Weiss of Chicago.

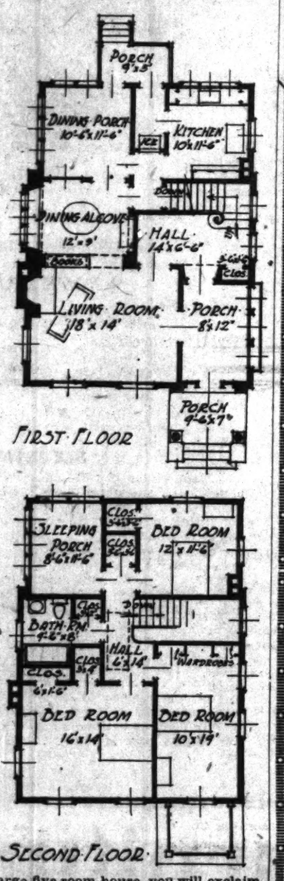
Love for the colonial is bred in the bone, for the young American is taught that in such homes as these were born those fearless patriots on whom rests the glory of achievement of our pioneer days. And as the severe exterior of the city house reflects the reserved nature of residents of our large cities who are ofttimes conventional in the extreme, so the homelike exterior of this colonial house unconsciously reveals the innate friendliness of its occupants.

Upon a solid foundation of enduring concrete rests a wall of dark red brick laid up in an attractive pattern consisting of a soldier course (brick on end) directly above the grade, then several courses of common bond, topped with a belt course of brick on edge. The brick wall is carried around to flank either side of the entrance stairway, where it supports tall columns and a characteristic balcony. A large chimney of the same kind of face brick foretells of an open fireplace within.

The main exterior of the house is of clapboards painted cream color, with porches, trim and sash of white, and a gray green roof of composition shingles. Set off against the cream tint of the body of the house are lovely blue green window blinds and two large boxes filled with a profusion of flowers.

For those who prefer stucco for the exterior, the same design as this can be reproduced pleasingly in cream or other colored cement stucco. The red brick base, blue green window blinds, and other features need not be changed. In place of the clapboards, metal laths may be nailed to the braced wood stud frame and be covered on the exterior with stucco, and back plastered between the studs on the interior. This form of back plastered metal lath construction is said to have great durability and be possessed of fire resistive features of unusual merit.

Although the architects designate this as nominally a five room house, it has, besides three large sized bedrooms and a living room and kitchen, a dining porch, a dining alcove, and a sleeping porch, and still another inclosed porch off the living room. Quite a large five room house, you will exclaim. But, as I have stated elsewhere, it is the roominess which makes for repose, and I predict that in the near future private homes in ever increasing number will have a marked tendency in this direction.



Care in planning extends into the basement as well. The heater and coal rooms are shut off from the laundry and other rooms by ceiling, high partitions, and a door. This keeps the dust and grime of the heating plant from spreading and saves much house cleaning. The separate toilet, off from the laundry, is a great convenience, as the bathroom is on the second floor. The laundry is large and well lighted and has a separate outside door leading out and up to the drying yard.

Here in the basement we find another desirable feature. An old fashioned home with a modern interior such as this requires modern materials where experience has shown that they are more desirable than others better known, possibly in earlier days. It is this, no doubt, that has led many architects to specify that the underside of the first floor joists over the heater and coal room are to be protected against fire.

On the first floor the extraordinary number of windows gives each room a cheerful appearance, and it is possible to convert more than half of the entire first floor into one large room should occasion arise. A wide cased opening, with a portable ready built bookcase to match the trim, is a part of this arrangement, and a removable partition between the dining porch and dining alcove is another.

Due to modern manufacturing methods many attractive ready built features for the interior are now possible where, in former years, because it was largely built to order, the cost of millwork was prohibitive.

After Three Years.

Returning to my home in the south, after about three years' absence in the east, I met a friend on the square—every little southern town has one—and asked him how Ethel, his wife, was getting along. He replied, "Why, didn't you know? Ethel has been dead for more than a year.

I discovered later that he had married again. U. F.

Such Was Her Intention.

It was at my wedding.

The clergyman had just put the question. "Wilt thou have this man—ete?"

Nervous and trembling I answered, in tones I am sure could be heard in both large, well filled rooms, "Yes, sir." H. L. P.

Giving Him Courage.

The X-ray room was in total darkness. My mother was on the table. Trying to help her all I could, I reached out to pat her hair, and then took her hand and held it caressingly. When the lights flashed on I discovered I was holding the hand of the young doctor who was assisting! H. M.

He Didn't Respond.

About one year ago a prize campaign was being carried on to see who would receive the greatest amount of subscriptions for a suburban weekly.

We have a glazed front porch and, having a number of trees and shrubs around the entrance, it is rather hard to detect faces after dark.

On this partidular evening my husband happened to be at the office, and about the time I was expecting him home a man came to the door with a package which I supposed to be ice cream.

I was playing the piano when the rap came at the door." I hastened out on to the front porch and, before I could unbolt the door, I started my usual glass. After some seconds I noticed stunt of making faces through the he did not respond in any way. Opening the door, I found to my amazement that he was a solicitor trying to get my subscription.

You can rest assured that with a hurried apology I gave my order for a subscription. L. H.

Telling It All.

My most embarrassing moment was when I was singing in the choir. I had been playing cards in the afternoon and was rather tired and sleepy.

Suddenly I heard the minister say: "Miss Evelyn will please lead the singing."

Half asleep, I replied: "It isn't my turn. I dealt last time. L. M. E.

ELECTRIC COOKING OF POTATOES.

YOU may call it sitting down cookery, or cozy nook cookery, or vagabond cookery—since you may take up your heat units and ladder all over the house—and in not few cases electric cooking is nowadays bathroom cookery. Once deprived of ample facilities—mayhap they were troublesome and oppressive—for cooking, many a woman is said to revel in the small cookery necessitated by occupying one room with bath.

But after all this bathroom cooking does not seem quite nice, and electric cooking is the most privileged when the heating element can be taken to porch or lawn of sun parlor, or even to some plain back porch, well shaded, but open to all the winds. In old days much summer cooking was done over a brazier in the open, and especially the fall preserving was so carried out. The electric fan, by the way, is a prime instrument for drying fruits and vegetables, and it can be getting in its work while canning is going on over a table grill in a tall kettle.

Ask for Demonstration.

The ingenuity that has been developed in adapting the independent little units to the needs of the hour or of three times a day has constituted no small part of the fun of it all. And lessons never learned in using wood or coal or gas as fuel are being learned while using electricity, and many of these can be applied in any other sort. She who will may get these lessons first hand, since cooking by electricity is still in the demonstration stage, and the trade employs cooks and clever home economics people and mechanicians to show those who are seeking equipment just how to use it.

The following paragraphs from some lessons sent out by the trade contain not the ideas I have hammered away at for years, but when I go to buy the sort of utensils recommended I find many of sorts I do not want, and sometimes not one of the kind I want. And when I go into some one's kitchen—I have been into a number this summer—to show a friend how to prepare a dish for the invalid, or how to promote economy, or prepare some highly standard or serviceable thing, I find nestles that are a holdover in idea from the time when cooking was done in kettles set into holes in the stove and so had to be larger a little above the bottom, so as not to slip further in.

That was an old fashioned fuel economy. Some of the holes in the stoves had many rings to fit kettles of different sizes, and often the bottoms of the kettles were hemispherical, with or without little legs or feet. The models of ancient cooking pots have the three legs or feet—but that is another and a long and to me picturesque story.

Use Flat Bottomed Pans.

Here are the paragraphs:

"As electric heat is conveyed by contact [metal to metal] and not by radiation, you will save time and electricity by having perfectly flat bottomed cooking pans; these should be of a size to exactly cover the plate, so as neither to waste any of the heating surface nor to have additional metal to heat beyond the radius of the plate. These cooking utensils should be shallow rather than deep.

"It goes without saying that dishes should be covered while cooking, so as to prevent loss of heat. Do not cover vegetables with an unnecessary amount of water; it is good for neither the flavor of the dinner nor the electric bills to boil quarts of waste water. Employ low heat as much as possible after the boiling point has been reached; and endeavor, when cooking various dishes required not to be done at the same time, to have another dish ready to pop on a hot plate when a completed one is removed.

"Food taken from the refrigerator should be allowed to stand in the kitchen a little while before it is placed on the stove or in the oven to cook. The waste of current in bringing icy food up to room temperature is unnecessary."

Aluminum Holds Heat.

If the cook has the fireless cooker two quart kettle with its hermetically tight cover, she has something that will fit perfectly over the regulation round table grill, and every use that has been developed for that valuable utensil is so much gain when it comes to cooking by electricity. And we may also take advantage of the heat retaining powers of the material, aluminum, of that kettle, and utilize stored heat.

Heat applied at one point instantly spreads to all evenly and it holds. Rice or potato or macaroni or some vegetable—to be used as such or made into a cream soup—maybe cooked, wrapped in a paper, and set on a wire stand to keep hot until chops are broiled, and so forth.

Variations for the Potato Course.

The indispensable, inevitable, and most delightful repeater of the dinner menu is the potato. It is one of the most gratifying dishes of the dinner when a good cook does the work. For the small family, potato cooking on the table grill is as easy as possible, and the clever cook will find a score of ways of varying the dish.

Mashed Potato.

Use one pound of potatoes for two people or two pounds for four people—less for small portions. Peel and slice potatoes into two quart fireless cooker kettle. Add one-half cup of cold water, put over round table grill at high. When water boils, reduce heat to low, and cook for fifteen or twenty minutes, and mash. Some potatoes will cook in fifteen minutes thinly sliced, and some sorts take twenty to twenth-five. Mash potato, add butter and other seasonings and two or three tablespoons of cream or cream to make your "mus" of the favorite consistency and beat it hard or whisk it around until it is like velvet.

Stewed Potato.

Prepare and cook the potato as for mashed potato, using more water if you like it that way, and cooking it a little longer; then season and add cream to make the whole of stew consistency. An onion or two or some celery cut fine may be cooked with the potato. With one cup of water and cooked at a low temperature for an hour or more, the potato will have a certain jellylike quality that some people like and others abhor. It has not the fresh, bright taste that we get in good mashed potato and may also have in the stew.

Potato Soup.

Of all the cream soups, none can be served so often and with such high approval perhaps as that of potato. It is good when you are tired. It is medicinal when you have a cold. It is easy on the digestion. It is fine on a cool day to warm you up. You may pile calories into it in the shape of butter and cream and even an egg yolk. You may sprinkle some grated cheese over it, or put some into it, but just as plain as can be it is good eating. Prepare and cook as you do potato stew and finish with milk, to thin to the right consistency. With a potato of fine flavor—potatoes vary a great deal in flavor—you will not miss the oyster soup when you can have this. Made with equal parts of onion, you may call it a chowder. To make it more like a chowder, first sauté some dice of salt pork in your grill pan, put that into the kettle, and add your potatoes and onions in layers, cover with water or measure exactly—a cup for a soup or stew—cover and cook as mashed potatoes.

Lyonnaise Potatoes.

This hearty and vigorous dish is frequently made of cold boiled potatoes, but it may easily be prepared of hot potatoes on and in the table grill. Cut up potatoes in dice, add but a bit of water—half a cup to a pound—put in the deep grill pan, bring it to boil at high heat, then cook at low, or uncover after six or eight minutes and put under the heating element while some onion is gently sautéd in butter or other fat in the shallower grill pan. It will be well if the water entirely evaporates around the potatoes while they are cooking. With this sort of cooking they will keep their shape without becoming the least bit mushy.

Add them to the onion—two medium onions are enough for six medium potatoes—let the two cook together about ten minutes, add some chopped parsley, and stir it in well, and salt and pepper to taste. If the mixture is too dry add a little water or meat stock. It may be slightly wet and browned and goided like an omelet with some parsley sprinkled over it.

Fried Potatoes.

Potatoes sliced and put into the deep grill pan in some hot fat may be covered and cooked a few minutes at high heat, then turned and finished at low, well covered. With the right arrangement potatoes stewed, as it were, and browned in a bit of fat, may be as palatable as French fried, but it requires management to get them cooked evenly. A little chopped parsley may be sprinkled over them. Slow and even work after the hot start is essential.

Boiled Potatoes.

There are little tight covered pails with the flat bottom that will fit a table grill without wasting any heating surface. They may be found in tin, aluminum, and enamel. We do need the deeper rather than the shallow utensil for boiling potatoes, and some of us have a preference for enamel for this for well known reasons. With a tight fitting cover potatoes will cook after well started boiling, over low heat, and best so, for they should not be cooked too fast. When they are nearly done some butter may be melted in the small grill pan, and after the potatoes have been drained and dried a bit over the heat they may be put into the pan, stirred around so as to get well buttered, then left under the element while some meat is cooked over it.

Some finely chopped parsley may be mixed with the melted butter or sprinkled over the potatoes just as they are served. It should be well washed and shaken dry in a cloth before it is chopped, so that the chopped bits will not adhere. There are charming little wooden bowls with an old fashioned shaped chopping knife for this work, but a little round board and a small French paring knife with a slicing motion will do good work together, or a few folds of paper toweling and a knife will do in an emergency, but be careful not to chop bits of paper with the parsley.

Baked Potatoes.

And the potato baked in the oven which fits almost equally well over the table grill and over a gas burner for baking over either is one of the easiest of all of preparing this vegetable. The potatoes may be washed in the morning, rubbed with bacon fat, be put into the electric oven, and this may be set over the grill at dinner or lunch time. And along with two good sized potatoes may be baked two apples in earthen cups, with water around the apples and sugar over, or perhaps sugar and butter. At this season of the year some apples cook so rapidly that it may be necessary to let the potatoes get the start. The steam from the apples will help in the perfect baking of the potato, which should be so clean that its skin may be buttered and eaten and enjoyed, especially if it is a newly and completely ripened and good baking potato.

Hot baked apple with cream, when the apples are of the last quality, make a rare dessert. You may eat your baked potato with salt and milk or cream, or you may mash the pulp, mix it with cream, put it back in the shells, sprinkle cheese over it, bake it some more, etc.

"PIGTAILS"—By Mildred Burleigh

IS MARRIAGE A FAILURE?

"Why do so many marriages go wrong? What are the underlying causes of happy marriages? Are there any happy marriages? What is the matter, if anything, with marriage, the institution?" H. L. George, the English novelist, investigated 150 marriages. One hundred and sixteen cases he eliminated as unsuccessful; in five cases the husband was unfaithful; in ten it was the wife; the husband disliked the wife in three cases and in seven it was the wife who hid the disliking. Only nine marriage, Mr. George says, were "apparently successful." Marriage," he adds, "is on its trial before a hesitating jury."

Look over the marriages you know yourself. How many are successes; how many are failures? And why?

The Tribune will pay $1 for each letter published on the question. Marriage—what do you think of it? Address Marriage Editor, The Sunday Tribune.

Consider the Hornbill.

There might be more satisfactory marriages if there were fewer hornbills among the men. The hornbill, as every naturalist knows, is the bird that imprisons the female when she goes on to her nest to set, walls her in with clay—all but a little opening just big enough for him to pass in a worm or bug—and leaves her there until she is ready to emerge into the world with her full grown fledgelings.

To be sure, the hornbill man is out after the early worm and prides himself on being a good provider. It usually takes him eight hours out of the twenty-four to scratch for his family; it takes the wife and mother at least twice that time daily to care for her home and little brood.

Among my acquaintances there is a woman who has my sympathy. She earned a living in an office before she married a promising young man. She has three children, the oldest 8 years of age. She does her housework, makes over her own and her husband's clothes for the children—in short, is the self-sacrificing mother that is the rule rather than the exception among middle class people. That woman literally never has a waking moment out of sight of her little ones. If she goes to a movie show, she must take the three babies with her. Tell me, what man, after working from morn's early dawn to eve's gray light, would care to dress three children and take them out?

Her husband goes golfing in the early morning and Sundays. She explains that "Jack needs the exercise." He belongs to a club, and that takes him out one night a week. Frequently he goes out for a game of cards, and his wife remarks that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

It is inevitable that people of moderate means should make many sacrifices. It appears to be nature's plan; but nature seems to have dealt out burdens in generous fashion to the females of every species. But why should the woman bear the brunt of child raising? Why do men take it for granted that the pleasure of waiting on them and their progeny is all the pleasure a wife needs.

Even though a man remains true to his wife during the years when he has her walled up (and there are hornbills which sit on the bough and twitter to free birds), by the time the children are old enough so that she may have a little time for her own amusement, Jack has grown accustomed to going without her and his years of selfishness have so alienated her affections that all the zest of going out with him is gone.

Most men feel they are sacrificing all when they tie themselves down to the support of a family, and make a great merit of handing over the pay envelope. They forget that conservation is the important end of the task of homemaking. They forget that time, as Arnold Bennett has told us in "How to Live on Twenty-four Hours a Day," is the most valuable possession of humanity. They should learn that they haven't the right to the twenty-four hours assigned to their wives in addition to their own.

Fewer hornbills: more happiness.

The Great Adventure.

Marriage is an agreement, and, like all contractual arrangements, in order to make same effective and binding, there should be a meeting of the minds of the parties. Herein lies the hitch, for while most other forms of contract have a definite idea expressed by the parties as to what they have mutually agreed to do or not to do, the same is not true in the majority of cases with persons entering into a matrimonial contract.

After the proposal has been made by the party of the first part and accepted by the party of the second part, for the time being the two should leave sentiment and other considerations aside, to do with this most momentous of contracts what they do with any other agreement, that is, to calmly and judicially weigh the matter from all possible angles.

Undertaken in this manner, marriage would be less of a disillusionment and disappointment. Sooner or later we shall reach a stage of development (and the sooner the better), when there will be a legal preliminary formula prescribed by law for those contemplating matrimony, such as having to make a legal record of the engagement before a public official; limiting the engagement and signing a contract setting forth the responsibilities to be assumed by each, state of health, etc.

Some may argue that such red tape would tend to discourage marriage, much like the terrors that were pictured before prohibition, but we do not believe that this would discourage any honorable couple having the correct intentions, but would serve as a deterrent to those who should be deterred and protected for their own good and that of society.

Marriage is not a failure and never will be to those who enter it with a serious and mutual understanding of what they are contemplating insofar as a forecast can be made at the time. Marriage contains the best prospects for happiness of any step in life.

All kinds of safeguards are provided for the protection of those making business contracts, so why should not the best of legal safeguards be provided for this most serious of contracts that two individuals are going to assume for life; but if not contemplated for life, it is not a marriage agreement from a civilized, moral, or Christian standpoint. I have never read in any contract words so portentous and serious as these: "For better or worse, in sickness or health, until death do us part."

Yes, marriage is a serious proposition, but a great adventure for those possessing the right qualifications of common sense, unselfishness, and love for things worthwhile.

With years of experience as a social service worker and from personal experience, I say that marriage, real marriage, is not a failure, and the man who states that it is should be prosecuted or chloroformed for the good of the commonwealth.

Are Your Children Undernourished?
Their Weight Will Tell
Mothers are just discovering that undernourishment is not confined to the children of the poor; that the carefully reared children of wealthy homes are as frequently underweight as are the children in poorer districts. They are realizing how imperative it is to watch their children's weight constantly, to insure normal growth and health.
The only really safe thing to do is to have, in your own home, a thoroughly reliable scale, on which you can weigh your children at regular intervals, under uniform conditions. In this way, the least deficiency in weight will be instantly noted, and suitable diet and care can be given to counteract it.
Fairbanks Health Scale
Fairbanks Scales (Fairbanks, Morse & Co., Chicago) have been, for several generations, the standard of weighing accuracy. The Fairbanks Health Scale is made especially for home use. It is absolutely dependable; convenient; compact; occupying but little space; standing flat against the wall or in a corner of the bathroom; attractive in appearance; finished in white enamel and nickel. A convenient measuring rod enables you to keep a record of the child's growth in height as well as weight.
Every member of the family should use this scale as a safeguard of health. Convenient tables of weights for babies, children and adults can be had in our interesting new department, where an experienced trained nurse can give you suggestions on building or reducing weight and its importance in maintaining health.
Fairbanks Baby Scale

Want to Keep Your Hair Perpetually Curly?
Perpetually wavy or curly hair is now within the means of every woman to possess. One need only get a few ounces of plain liquid Silmerine from the druggist and apply a little of it occasionally with a clean tooth brush before doing up the hair. When this dries the most beautiful and natural looking waves and creases imaginable are in evidence. Wind and heat do not affect the curliness as where a heated iron has been used.
Liquid Silmerine is so pure and harmless there is not the slightest danger of spotting the gown or streaking the hair, and it leaves no sticky or greasy trace. It will also be appreciated as a beneficial dressing, as it keeps the hair so soft, silky and lustrous (bobbed or long hair).

Sleeping Coat Becollared and Befrogged. Buttonless Slipover Pajama. Collarless Pajama Still Predominates. Jacket with Contrasting Collar and Girdle.

CUSTOM GOVERNS SLEEPING GARMENTS.

By A. T. Gallico.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—What one wears at night in the privacy of one's sleeping quarters is not governed by that which is strictly fashion. Whether the coat of one's pajamas has three or four buttons, or frogs, as the case may be, does not depend upon a mighty gathering and conference of the arbiters of men's styles, nor does a hobby of the Prince of Wales find its way into the bedrooms of American men. In short, we need not fear to wear last season's night shirt.

But although there is no definite fashion in night wear, there are customs which are almost universally followed. Just at present we find ourselves at the completion of a cycle in sleeping clothes. For the old fashioned night shirt, that plain white garment with the split at either side, which survives in many homes, and which some thirty or forty years ago gave way to the pajama suit, through the discovery, so the story goes, by some Englishman in the West Indies, that the loose fitting trousers of the Indian people were a most successful sleeping garment, seems to have found its way back into favor in a more elaborate form. One of the oldest manufacturers of night wear has brought out a cross between the night shirt of early days and the modern pajama. It is not a night shirt, but a coat, and is becollared and befrogged beyond recognition by its predecessor.

It fills the most important function of a sleeping garment, comfort. Older men, who have never been persuaded to give up the night shirt for the trousered pajama, have accepted it as a substitute for the former, while young men who never possessed a night shirt, but who don't find sleeping in trousers the most comfortable thing in the world, have taken to this new affair with enthusiasm. It is like a long pajama top, coming just to the knees, is easily put on, and because of the bell flare given it in cutting, it does not work its way up about the wearer and become uncomfortable. For lounging purposes it is possible to buy trousers to match. The coats may be secured in all grades. Frogs seem to be more popular than buttons, as is the case with the regular pajamas.

Materials for night clothes are as varied as the prices. Soisette is probably the most popular. This is a pongee and is silky in appearance without having the drawback of a prohibitive price tag. Mercerized cotton is another popular number, while lightweight oxford cloth, madras, and crêpe are also used to a great extent. The crêpe has the advantage of needing no ironing. Silk, because of the aforementioned high price, is not in popular demand. Silk pajamas play their chief rôle on stage and screen, where garments of humbler station are seldom seen. However, less expensive pajamas are no less attractive. I saw some of poplin the other day which, made up as they were with a long jacket and a girdle, collar, and cuffs of contrasting color, were adequately dressy in appearance for lounging purposes.

Much attention is given to the color schemes used in men's sleeping clothes. Pastel shades seem to predominate. Lavenders, blues, pinks, pearl grays and tans are especially in evidence. Plain white is trimmed with bands and collars, etc. These are more popular just now than the stripes which have been much in favor in the past. Black seems to be about the only color which has escaped the call of night duty, and yet this was not always so. Some forty or fifty years ago black sateen night shirts had a vogue which it is hard to understand. It is difficult to imagine anything more incongruous than a black sateened figure between two white sheets.

As for collars versus no collars, there are probably more sold without than with, but in my opinion, the pajamas with the collar is a more becoming article of dress than the plain neck. However, I saw something new at a manufacturer's which was extremely attractive. It was a pajama suit, the top of which was a slipover in middy style with a plain round neck. This model is recommended for bachelors and others who have trouble in keeping buttons on their night clothes. On this there are no buttons to lose, and a neat effect is thus always assured.

Flannel and flannelette are a staple in the pajama business which will always have its patrons. They are especially of value to the country gentleman who rises on a cold winter morning and betakes himself to the cellar to shake down the furnace, or for that brave man who sleeps out throughout the winter season. He of the steam heated apartment has no need of flannel.

MY VACATION ADVENTURE

What was the most thrilling moment in your vacation? Was it on a boat or motor ride on a lovely night with the only one? Was it at a dance? Was it a kiss in the moonlight? Or was it a tug at the hook by a big fish? Or a close call when your canoe upset? Write your most thrilling experience and send it to Vacation Editor, The Sunday Tribune. One dollar will be paid for each letter printed.

Once Too Often.

The most thrilling moment in my life occurred while visiting a cousin who lived near the Wisconsin river, during a Thanksgiving vacation period. A slimy ice had formed over a slough, commonly called Big Cat, and my cousin and I went skating. The first freeze-up always served to attract the young folks to this slough.

The ice was thin—what we called "hickory ice" on account of its bending and yielding resiliently as we glided over it. We would dart back and forth across the hazardous pond, until it fell my lot to drop through into the icy water, ten feet deep and twenty-five feet from the shore. I had learned to swim but recently.

My cousin, seeing the alarming predicament I was in, ran for help while I was struggling desperately, breaking ice and scrambling among treacherous weeds below to reach the shore, so near and yet so far. I landed finally, much exhausted, just as my cousin and a farmer came breathlessly upon the scene. P. J. K.

A Narrow Squeak.

Two classes in our school were taking a day's vacation escorted by one teacher. We were going to the stone quarry and the quickest way was to cross the river over a trestle railroad bridge. The teacher hesitated to take us for fear some of us might get dizzy at the sight of water so far beneath us, but we all pleaded to cross, so we went. About half way over we heard a train whistle, it was coming toward us and coming fast. We could not outrun it either way. The teacher screamed. We made for the side of the bridge. Some of the boys dropped beneath, hanging on the ties; some climbed down the sides into the water; while the rest of us crowded as far from the rails as we could without dropping off.

No one was hurt, but the teacher was terribly frightened. I'll wager she has chosen different spots for her vacations since. E. M.

Such a Sight to Behold.

Not wanting to show my complete ignorance I will mention no names. My vacation was spent in Illinois along the Kankakee river. Mother, her two sisters, and their husbands and I went on a fishing trip, camping in the woods along the river.

We were just about asleep when the dog which we had tethered to the tent pole, began to bowl. One of the uncles got up to see what was wrong. It was intensely dark, and when uncle reached the door of the tent he halted. Just where our camp fire had been was a brilliant green light, covering the ground for about five feet around the fire. We had split some wood for our morning fire and it was piled up near the fire. Uncle hesitated to advance. He loosened the dog, who started after the light, uncle following. The light seemed to be centered in a certain long black object in the woodpile. The dog sniffed, uncle stooped over and could detect nothing but a stick of chopped wood. He picked it up. The entire end was illuminated—like faces of illuminated watches.

He stepped to the tent and called our attention to it. We were awestricken. We searched the woodpile for every chip and stick of the wood that could be found. Of course, we had discovered a rare mineral—radium or something. None of us got the much desired sleep that night. How could we sleep with fortune so close at hand?

Next morning we decided to break camp and started for home. We loaded our precious wood, chips and all, into the machine and started at dusk. Of course, the wood was just like a cradle watch in daytime, nothing unusual, and we were all anxiously waiting for dark to come again. We drove into Indiana, out of the marshy Illinois woods. When we reached home there were no signs of light on the precious wood. We were laughed at when people asked what was the idea of bringing firewood home. We told of our experience and were informed it is not an uncommon sight to see whole bodies of trees along marshes lighted up in such a manner. It is called marsh wood.

How thankful we were that we did not mention the discovery to those around our camp. How they would have joked us, but, O, the joy of those few moments of excitement! M. W.

My Nicest Compliment

What was the nicest compliment you ever got? Was it a tribute to achievements, social gifts, learning, beauty? Was it forthright and blunt, wittily done, or something subtle? Write it out and send to the Compliment Editor, The Tribune, Chicago. One dollar will be paid for each letter printed.

Better than Gifts.

My nicest compliment came from my small brother on my birthday. After I had received all my presents he came to me and said, "Sis, every time your birfday comes you look beaufuler." E. Z.

After Due Observation.

The nicest compliment I ever had came from a dear little old woman who lives next door to me.

After watching me for three years give most of my time and attention to my two well and happy baby boys, she said: "I wish you could have the care of every baby in this town, for you truly are the best mother I ever knew." E. G. F.

Beyond the Crisis.

Father was seriously ill and for nearly a year was under the care of one of the world's greatest surgeons.

Because of his age, serious illness, and aversion to having any one else wait upon him I was allowed to care for him constantly.

When he was well on the road to recovery his doctor grasped me by the hand and said "God bless you—faithful daughter. My work would have been as nothing but for your loving care and constant hard work." C. M.

Honor Thy Father and Mother.

The highest compliment I ever received was from a neighbor woman. One evening when she came in I was sitting by the fire reading to father and mother and she said: "When my children grow up if they honor their father and mother as you do I shall be the happiest and proudest woman on earth." R. L. O.

Of Course You Will Buy Some Malt Extract

THE only question is which malt extract will you buy? Good malt extract is made out of choice No. 1 malt barley. It is filled with sugar, rich with malt and almost free from moisture.

A cheap malt extract, on the other hand, is low in sugar content and flat in malt value, because it is filled with moisture and adulterated with cheap corn.

Such a malt extract is of no earthly value even after you have bought it.

There is no reason for experimenting in buying malt extract because Puritan Malt extract sets the standard all over the world both as to quality and as to price.

You can't pay more and get as good a quality as you get in Puritan and you can't pay less and get anything worth taking home.

Puritan is the richest malt extract made anywhere in the world, and, because of the enormous quantity produced, it is as cheap in price as you can afford to pay.

So ask for and demand

"You Hypnotizin' Movie Films," Carol Vacationists

By Mae Tinee

HAS your attention been called as yet this vacation to a deep, dark secret regarding the movies? No? Hist, then! They're propaganda!

They subtly have torn the prospective vacationist from the pleasant paths he has trod before and led him into devious ways he wots nothing of as he has seen them shown up on the silver sheet.

For years you have spent your vacation somewhere you firmly believed you would always spend your vacation. This year, for some unknown reason, you felt you must have a complete change of air and scenery. (How cool the waters looked in that picture! How seductive that lake liner appeared!) So you decide to take a lake cruise. (Despite the fact that you're afraid as a rule of the water.)

A lake cruise! You look up some literature on the subject. It is in keeping with the movies. You will take a lake cruise on "one of our magnificent white liners, through four lakes—along the beautiful wooded shores of St. Marie's river—through the famous Soo locks, up through the 30,000 islands"—etc. Price and the rest of it appeals to you mightily.

There is just nothing, it seems, that magnificent white liner lacks, including a socially talented hostess and sand for the children to play in. You cast an eye back over the picture you saw not so long ago and hustle down to the ticket office.

And Nobody to Make a Fuss.

Well, after that, it's "water stuff" for yours. You experience seasickness and know that the movies are wrong. It isn't funny. It might have been funnier if on that first night out there were plenty of people to make a fuss over your misery. But who was there? NOBUDDY! Not even a doctor, who, being new on the job, had taken to his stateroom early in the game and was ringing for ice water before several hundred others, including waiters, bell hops, and yourself, commenced ringing for him.

The steward, warning against overeating, had been regarded with lowering and suspicious looks. Trying to save on a meal, was he? Green around the gills, miserable lubbers who had never known a rough night at sea before, crept furtively and angrily into the dining room, to emerge with frenzied leaps—in too dire straits even to try to evade the stern eye of the man in the white suit and brass buttons who looked unutterable "I told you so's." Gazing at the devastation all about, he repeated four words continuously:

"PORTER! Mop. Hot water."

O, well, the next day dawned brightly. You recovered and soon were able to take an interest in your fellow travelers—the dashing but wary bachelor from Kentucky; the husband who was born to be a sailor, attended by his pining and martyred wife, who was not, and "If he ever drags me out on a funeral procession like this again"—etc.; the intrigued men and maids who fashioned themselves about the prow in the moonlight. You'd seen it all in the pictures. But THIS was life on a lake cruise! Well——

Why Do They Visit Canada?

Then—Canada! Did you ever in your life hear of so many people as are going to Canada this year? Due, my dear, without a doubt, to the Royal Mounted police stories that have been flooding our screens. Pictures with vistas of eternal snows and pine trees sublimely combined with the daring forms of heroes on softly stepping horses, who "always get their man."

The visitors to Canada don't, perhaps, know just why they're going, but they're on their way because for months a little old subconscious something in the back of their brain has been prodded by Royal Mounted Police stories.

Then the various girls' camps. Were there ever so many Girl Scouts or Camp Fire Girls before. Hordes of them are scuttling to camps, where they peel potatoes and make beds and eat things that are good for them and return declaring they've had the time of their lives. Why did they go? News reels. Pretty kids in khaki. Plain as the nose on your face.

Yes, as vacation propaganda the movies are distinctly T-H-E-R-E! They work in a mysterious way their wonder to perform—but, eventually if not now, they get you yet. After a year of suggestion you obey that impulse!

"This Freedom"—The Logical Successor to "If Winter Comes."

"THIS FREEDOM"—the very title of the new Hutchinson book is a challenge. It needs must be a challenge—the book which follows such a phenomenal success as "If Winter Comes" had. The curiosity of the multitudes this fall will be centered on "This Freedom" and the new novel by Sinclair Lewis, "Babbitt." Two such best sellers, leaping as they did past the $75,000 mark, were either read or talked about by practically every one who reads books. They were either liked enormously or disliked with vigor—they were both the sort of book that demands a passionate reaction, whether of allegiance or dislike. Every one is going to be curious to know whether they've done the job as well again or as poorly again, or better, or whatever.

I don't say that "This Freedom" and "Babbitt" will be this year's best sellers as "If Winter Comes" and "Main Street" were last year's. One can never tell about popularity. It seems assured. A book has in it every quality which ought to catch the fancy of the peepul, but it is like some apparently perfectly healthy balloons whose life air seeps away between the time you buy them to take home to wee Willie and the time wee Willie looks upon them with passionate sorrow and informs you, "That ain't a b'loon; that's just a string with a piece o' something hangin' to it."

Nobody can really tell, of course. If any one could, he would be the richest man in the world, because he'd always publish best sellers and he'd soon have the market cornered, just as some mythical stock broker who never made a mistake could, by a series of never failing coups, eventually control the stock market of the whole world. Amusing idea that, cornering the publishing business of the world. "Not a dissatisfied customer in twenty years"—is it that they

BEST SELLERS OF THE AGES

By James O'Donnell Bennett.

Thirty-eighth Paper—"Pride and Prejudice"; or, Are You a Janeite?

EVERYBODY KNOWS THIS PASSAGE—

Also read again, and for the third time at least, Miss Austen's very finely written novel of "Pride and Prejudice." That young lady had a talent for describing the involvements and feelings and characters of ordinary life which is to me the most wonderful I ever met with. The Big Bow-wow strain I can do myself like any now going; but the exquisite touch which renders ordinary, commonplace things and characters interesting, from the truth of the description and the sentiment, is denied to me. What a pity such a gifted creature died so early!
(Journal, March 14, 1826.) SIR WALTER SCOTT.

AND THIS—

Shakespeare has had neither equal nor second. But among the writers who, in the point which we have noticed [delicate yet definite discrimination of character, finenese of shading, absence of caricature], have approached nearest to the manner of the great master, we have no hesitation in placing Jane Austen.
(Essay on Madame D'Arblay; 1843.) LORD MACAULAY.

BUT FEW ARE SO FAMILIAR WITH THIS—

I am at a loss to understand why people hold Miss Austen's novels at so high a rate, which seem to me vulgar in tone, sterile in artistic invention, imprisoned in the wretched conventions of English society, without genius, wit, or knowledge of the world. Never was life so pinched and narrow. The one problem in the mind of the writer in both the stories I have read, "Persuasion" and "Pride and Prejudice," is marriageableness. All that interests in any character introduced is still this one, Has he or she the money to marry with, and conditions conforming? 'Tis "the nympholepsy of a fond despair," say, rather, of an English boarding house. Suicide is more respectable.
(Journal, August, 1861.) RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

OR THIS—

When I take up one of Jane Austen's books, such as "Pride and Prejudice," I feel like a barbeeper entering the kingdom of heaven. I know what his sensation would be and his private comments. He would not find the place to his taste, and he would probably say so. MARK TWAIN.
(Paine's "Mark Twain," chapter CCLXXX.)

IN all the literature of English fiction there is not, I suppose, a book more perilous to recommend, or safer to commend, than this tale—alike so placid and so mordant—called "Pride and Prejudice." A charming, witty, quaintly fastidious, and altogether quizzical south-of-England girl of one and twenty years wrote it a century and a quarter ago, waited seventeen years to see it published, and, when it was published, would not suffer her name to be placed on the title page. Her habits and likings were domestic, her environment provincial—she was seldom away from home and never outside of England—and the spirit of her life was the spirit of modesty, piety, and gentle self-effacement. Her mother used to say of her and her older sister Cassandra Elizabeth—"If Cassandra were going to have her head cut off Jane would insist upon sharing her fate." As to her personal attributes, she lives in the annals of literary biography as "dear Jane Austen."

But today many a traveler makes the journey of seventy miles southward from London to view Winchester cathedral not because it has the longest nave of any church in Europe save one but because there Jane Austen rests, beneath a tablet on which are carved the words from "Proverbs":

She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

No satirist—and Jane, though her touch was incomparably deft and delicate and fine, could be very scathing—ever left this world with a gentler recommendation to the next.

She died 105 years ago, at perfect peace with a world which for twenty years—in print and out—she had so prettily quizzed—and continues to quiz, if it will but acknowledge it, with a pertinence that reduces that long century to a yesterday.

Her masterpiece, "Pride and Prejudice"—if among her six books there is one more masterly than another—is still a storm center; to some a discipline, to some a delight; to some their pleasure in it is a source of pride profound but harmless—that is why it is safe to commend the book—and in some the mere mention of it excites rebellion—and that is why 'tis no safe book to recommend. Try not the task. It has been known to cool friendships. "What is all this?" thy friend may say. "Five hundred tedious, thin spun, twaddling

Meet Miss Hayes, a Good Deed in a Pompous World

By Sheppard Butler.

THERE is piquant contrast, in "To the Ladies!", in the fragrant presence of Miss Helen Hayes and the Satanic humor of Messrs. Kaufman and Connelly's flings at some of our best-loved ponderosities. I do not share the opinion of one or two of my betters that Miss Hayes is, technically, an accomplished actress. But she is going to be, and she is now a rare and glowing personality—a little girl making her way serenely among the grown-up artificialities of stageland, bringing it the balsam of youth and making necessary the employment of many hackneyed adjectives, such as fresh, wholesome, radiant, and lovable. It will be as well, I should think, if she puts off for a time the business of becoming an accomplished actress. Miss Maude Adams . . . well, there are differing views as to whether Maude Adams ever was an accomplished actress. And Miss Adams, of course, has nothing to do with the case. What I rose to remark was that, in "To the Ladies!", Miss Hayes shines like a good deed in, say, a pompous world.

MISS HELEN KING in "Thank-U," a comedy about ministers, coming tonight to the Cort. [Schwarz photo.]

As for the Kaufman-Connelly satire, it seems to share some of the manner of Sir William Schwenk Gilbert and some of the method of Clare Briggs. Its keen topical flavor recalls "Pinafore" and the rest; its blunt good nature suggests the cartoons labeled "O, Man!" and "There's One in Every Office." With complete amiability, it gets under the skin of a number of our national foibles in such a way as to make the Great American Business Man uncomfortable if it didn't make him laugh.

One by one, it impales and holds up for derisive consideration such matter as:

The "Be Yourself and Make $10,000 a Year" ads in the onward and upward magazines.

The passion to become absentee landlord of a grapefruit farm in Florida.

The Compendium of Eloquence, at a dollar down, with its canned speech for every occasion.

The business banquet, with its interminable addresses, its clattering waiters, and the head of the firm announcing as a reward for long service a nice silver button.

The newfangled office filing system which nobody can understand.

The voice of doom, announcing always that the man you seek is "in conference."

All this would be cruel, since we men take ourselves seriously, were it not that we never think we are quite as comic as the other fellow. Human nature being thus constituted, "To the Ladies!" can safely be recommended as blithe travesty and as good diversion. Its authors, as the toastmaster says in their banquet scene, "need no introduction." They wrote "Dulcy," which Chicago saw and liked before New York ever heard of it. George S. Kaufman of the New York Times is the author of many paragraphs about the theater which have appeared in THE TRIBUNE credited to the journal under whose aegis he writes. Marc Connelly is a reformed newspaper man, widely known as a contributor to Life.

"Lightnin'" Here a Year; Will Break All Local Records.

Frank Bacon and "Lightnin'" approach another milestone in their amazing career at the Blackstone. With tonight's performance an "anniversary week," comprising some special festivities, will be inaugurated. On Tuesday night "The Bat's" record breaking run of 476 Chicago performances will have been equaled, and on Friday the actual anniversary will be observed, the play having arrived on Sept. 1, 1921.

Two further achievements, soon to be accomplished, will give "Lightnin'"

Nash Leads the World in Motor Car Value

NASH SIX TOURING

$1240

From the beginning of Nash manufacture it has been our resolute and constant aim to provide a car that, through its initial performance to the final hour of its long life, will travel with the utmost fidelity and economy.

To this end every detail, every feature and every process in production has been definitely improved and refined in the most exacting degree.

As an instance, you are given the Nash Perfected Valve-in-Head Motor. Intensive and persistent effort by Nash engineers have developed in this already powerful type of motor an even greater and more fluid flow of power.

At the same time, certain other refinements have made possible the turning of practically every atom of burnable fuel into an appreciable increase in mileage.

The resulting reliability and regularity with which this motor functions has towered so distinctly above the common calibre of performance as to become a matter for particular motoring comment.

Then again, there are the pronounced advantages of the new-type spring construction, endowing not only added comfort to Nash travel, but also greatly lengthened life to the car.

Acting as a great cushion between the occupants and the irregularities of the road these scientifically graduated springs impart a delightful buoyance at all speeds.

Aiding remarkably in eliminating sidesway and in lessening the ordinary twisting of the car frame they also soften in a like degree the road punishment of continuously hard service.

It is the noteworthy performance, day in and day out, of such features as these that emphasize most emphatically the inherently high quality of Nash construction.

And it is the Nash manufacturing ability, only, that has made such great value possible at the newly reduced Nash prices.

Prices Range from $915 to $2190, f. o. b. Factory

the distinction of having broken every long run record in the history of Chicago theaters. "The Bat's" record by the calendar, as distinct from the total number of performances, was fifty-three weeks; this will be equaled at the Blackstone on Sept. 7, and on the following day "Lightnin'" will have been in Chicago longer than any other entertainment. The remaining mark is the 500 performances which, it was claimed, "A Knight for a Day" crowded into its forty-eight weeks at the Whitney Opera house in 1907 and 1908. For good measure, "Lightnin'" will equal this on Sept. 16. Then, since there is no prospect of their leaving town, Bacon and his play will proceed to make further theater history.

Their career thus far in Chicago has been in every way unique. Playing at the least accessible of the downtown theaters, through a generally disastrous season and a lean summer, "Lightnin'" has piled up receipts of nearly $1,000,000, representing, up to last night, 475,000 paid admissions. It will soon have paid to the government, from its Chicago engagement alone, $100,000 in war tax.

FRANK BACON in "Lightnin'."

Repeatedly, during its stay at the Blackstone, it has confounded the predictions of the theatrical wiseacres. No play, they said, could draw a crowd for many months so far from the loop. But "Lightnin'" did, and from September to May its prosperity never wavered. In May and June the attendance decreased a little, whereupon the wise ones vowed it was "through." "To the Ladies!" was booked for the beginning of the Blackstone's new season and there was talk of sending the Bacon play to Boston. Then something happened. Mid-July, the very nadir of the amusement season, found "Lightnin'" back in its stride, doing a winter business. Last Monday's performance was the best in point of attendance of any Monday night in six months.

"Now we are not even thinking of the end," says George A. Kingsbury, who has managed the company from the beginning. "We estimate, roughly, that 200,000 people from out of town have seen 'Lightnin',' and that of the Chicagoans who have seen the play perhaps 10 per cent are 'repeats'—that is, they have come more than once. If the population of Chicago is 3,000,000, we've barely scratched the surface. Think of the possibilities! We'll be here a long time yet."

Gossip of the Theaters.

To the list of playhouses engaged in brightening up for renewed activity the stately Auditorium is now added. It will come to life next Sunday evening, giving shelter to the entertainment called "Strut Miss Lizzie"—one of the varied crop of revues by colored performers which has sprung up in New York in the wake of the enormously successful "Shuffle Along." This will be the first of the colored shows to reach Chicago intact, though an echo of "Shuffle Along" is to be observed under another title at the Green Mill gardens on the north side. Concerning "Strut Miss Lizzie" its herald in Chicago assures prospective customers that it has "100 singers, dancers, and comedians in scenes of great exotic beauty, after the manner of Max Reinhart." Creamer and Layton, a pair of song-writing comedians, are the featured players.

Delay in putting the finishing touches on the new Selwyn and Harris theaters in Dearborn street has made necessary a change in the dates of their opening. The plan to celebrate their inaugurals on consecutive nights has been abandoned, and, instead, it is probable that "The Circle" will arrive at the Selwyn on Monday, Sept. 18, and "Six-Cylinder Love" at the Harris on the following Sunday. Other altered appointments restore Miss Marjorie Rambeau to the list of prospective visitors and hasten the coming of Cecil Lean and Miss Cleo Mayfield by a week. Miss Rambeau's engagement in "The Goldfish," canceled at the Garrick, has been transferred to the Studebaker, where she will be seen on the night of Sept. 16. Mr. Lean and Miss Mayfield will reach the Great Northern on Sept. 10 instead of Sept. 17.

The Majestic will end its career tonight as a home of standard vaudeville and on Thursday will reopen as a temple of "continuous" variety, giving uninterrupted performances from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. with no seats reserved, and at prices ranging from 10 to 40 cents. Meanwhile, the Palace Music hall begins its new season this afternoon with the old-time patrician programs, comprising for the first week, John Steel, the tenor; Miss Mabel Ford with some assistants; Paul Morton and Naomi Glass, and others. Other news of vaudeville is that the Orpheum circuit is preparing a "third of a century" anniversary celebration similar to that held recently by the Keith circuit in the east. The festivities will begin on Oct. 22.

MABEL FORD at the Palace.

Of Al Jolson, who will be at the Apollo soon in "Bombo," a Chicago admirer writes: "I would urge a few words for your column on Sunday about Mr. Jolson—there is such a lot to tell about him. He must have tons of money, for though he is generous he is also wise. A man who can leave $40,000 deposited in a Chicago bank for several years (because he had forgotten the name of the bank and lost the bankbook) cannot be pressed for funds. That's what Jolson did—and the story comes on good authority. He is 'temperamental,' but at the same time he works hard and well. . . ." Sidelights, as it were, on Olympus.

Revivals of John Gay's sequel to "The Beggar's Opera" are promised in London by two producers. This later work is called "Polly" [after Polly Peachum] and takes the characters of "The Beggar's Opera" to the West Indian plantations, whither Polly goes in search of her husband, Capt. Macheath, who has deserted her. Macheath is now a pirate chief, ruling a precious crew of buccaneer-bandits. He is slain in battle with some high-souled Indians, and Polly, after a perilous adventure or two, loses her heart to a noble Indian prince. It is hoped that the piece will inherit the popularity of "The Beggar's Opera," which has passed its nine hundredth performance in London.

The "Krazy Kat Ballet," by John Alden Carpenter of Chicago, which was to have been a part of the next Fred Stone show, will be seen instead in the new "Greenwich Village Follies," to be revealed in New York next week. Carl Randall will be the principal dancer.

"Hollywood Follies," which had a brief summer career at the Playhouse, is being revived as one of the "unit shows" in Shubert vaudeville.

Personalities.

Miss Fay Bainter will appear in San Francisco next week in something called "The Sporting Thing to Do." It may and may not prove to be her play for the new season. . . . Miss Elsie Janis is going into vaudeville, at, they say, $1,800 a week. . . . Mitchell Harris, last seen here in "Shavings," is newly engaged as Mme. Petrova's leading man for her forthcoming Chicago engagement in "The White Peacock." . . . Miss Eleanor Painter, whom we liked in "The Last Waltz," will sing this year in "The Lady in Erming," a London success by Jean Guilbert. . . . Augustus Thomas, in his spare moments, has written another play, taking it from John Taintor Foote's story, "The Song of the Dragon." George M. Cohan will produce it. . . . Gilbert Emery will have the leading rôle in Channing Pollock's "The Fool," discussed recently in these columns. Richard Bennett, who acted it on the Pacific coast, will return to the Theater Guild's production of "He Who Gets Slapped." . . . Miss Francine Larrimore abandons her hope for a new play for the present, and will travel about a while in "Nice People."

This style—long paragraphs strung together with little rows of periods and punctuated with blackface type, like currants in a cake, is much in vogue at the moment with newspaper makers here and there. Do you like it?

COMING THIS WEEK IN SONG AND DANCE

MISS LOUISE GROODY.
[White Photo.]

This sprightly entertainer is one of the many who will reopen the Colonial tomorrow night with "Good Morning, Dearie," said in the east to be a very good show. You may remember her as the dancer who saved the day in "Fiddlers Three," a rather stodgy musical comedy offered some years ago at the Olympic. More recently, she was here in "The Night Boat."

MISS JANET VELIE.
[Alfred Cheney Johnston Photo.]

Her voice will be raised in song at the Illinois tonight in the new entertainment brought thither by the jesting Ed Wynn. She has not visited us since we saw her three years ago in the piece called "La La Lucille" at the Colonial. Since then she has added to her fame by "creating," as they say, the title role in Mr. Cohan's "Mary."

"You Hypnotizin' Movie Films," Carol Vacationists

collected while Canada and the lakes and virgin forests page us futilely. Or maybe we'll buy a home, stay there, raise corn, and fool the old familiar way that way.

KICK KORNER

IT'S OBJECT—OBJECTION.

Dear Miss Tinée: I see you have a column for kicks. I went last night to see "Lonesome Corners." When I get here is informed that his wife [illegible] has been kidnaped] has a little girl, he pays no more attention than if it were a mouse. I think he might express a little anxiety to see his child. A. D. W.

[Editor's note—He was probably never glad to be a father.]

Dear Miss Tinée: I am afraid I was innocently irritated Catherine H. Tilla. It is a pity to be annoyed about trifles when the weather is hot. You may be right about Catholic marriage—I am not a member of that faith myself—but you see the action of that picture happened to be in England in the closing decades of the nineteenth century, not America. I think we should take that into consideration.

I see she takes it for granted she is scrubbing a mere man. How disappointing, what energy wasted. For, alas, I am of the weaker sex. It is kind of her to suggest a tonic for me, but I am glad to say I don't need one. I am quite well at present. Neither do I see too many movies for I see only about four a week, and enjoy them thoroughly.

Perhaps the reason I did not like "Smilin' Through" as much as she did may be due to the fact that I have seen Norma Talmadge in some lovely pictures where her beauty and charm was given plenty of scope—pictures like "Poppy," "The Sign on the Door," "The Isle of Conquest,' and so on and so, of course, I like to see her in work that rings true. However, every one to her taste—there are pictures to please us all, I should think. Please do not think me a chronic fault finder. I am not that. I take more delight in the movies than most, read your column every morning faithfully, and never miss a good picture if I can get to it, but in films as in life, I like sincerity and truth. H. M. C.

[Editor's Note: Thus endeth an argument with both ladies (we hope) happy.]

Dear Miss Tinée: This is in answer to R. A. D., who wrote a kick with regard to the lack of praise received by Miss Agnes Ayres.

R. A. D.—let me greet you!
I, too, think Miss Ayres is divine.
I surely like to meet you;
We'd get along just fine.

For two years you've admired her?
That's going some, I'll say!
That long your heart's desired her?
She's in your heart to stay!

Well, R. A. D., she's in mine, too.
I'll love her as long as I live.
Whenever I am feeling blue,
Her sweet face much comfort can give.

Come on, R. A. D., let us praise her,
Let's help to keep up her good name.
And with our great love, let us raise her
High on the ladder of fame.

KATHRYN.

EDITOR'S KICK.

Will you PLEASE write on one side of the paper only? And if you don't mind, will you do it anyhow?

BROWSING BACKWARD

Dear Miss Tinée: You ask some of the movie fans to tell you what pictures they liked a great deal. I want to tell you I think "Peter Ibbetson" or "Forever," which ever you want to call it, is one of the most artistic photoplays that has ever been shown. I liked it heaps better than "Way Down East," and the way I rounded up all the family and relatives and neighbors to go see it the next day you'd think I was getting a commission. C. N. J.

"Dear Miss Tinée: Browsing backward, I think of two pictures that I thought were wonderful. One of these is "The Woman God Forgot," with Wallace Reid and Geraldine Farrar. Wally as "Alvarado" was great, as was Geraldine as the daughter of Montezuma. The other picture was "The Spaw Man." Elliot Dexter was at his best in this picture. Ann Little, as the spaw, acted the part wonderfully. "The Temple of Dust," with Seasue Hayakawa, is a picture I will always remember. More recent pictures that impressed me were "Dinty," with the delightful Wesly Barry; "Bob Hampton of Placer," "The Kid," and "Humoresque." I am sure any one who saw "Humoresque" is not likely to forget it for some time.

A revival of some of the old pictures, I think, would meet with approval by all. Your Browsing Backward column is interesting. PEGGY.

ASK ME! ASK ME!

OSERVER: You'd never guess—and I'll never tell you.

SESAME: Yes, Dustin, not William Farnum plays in "Oathbound." Like it?

ANXIOUS READER: Billie Burke is still Mrs. Ziegfeld. No, she is not in the films at present. She has been pretty busy in the limelight.

BENJAMIN H.: No, May McAvoy is not related to Lois Wilson. Douglas Fairbanks had his mustache at last reports. Wesley Barry doesn't paint his freckles on. The gentleman you mention may be a "good spender," but if he's a good actor I'm a rotten critic. You're welcome.

JESSICA: Strongheart, the dog, is owned by Jane Murfin. Larry Trimble directs him. He paid a visit to Broadway not long ago, saw all the sights, and is reported to be busily at work again after his brief vacation. "Brawn of the North" is the name of the picture he has been working on. His next will be a dog story by Albert Payson Terhune with a Long Island locale.

D. D.: That doesn't matter. Unless you yearn for matinee idol rôles, you don't have to be anybody's beautiful doll. Homely? Well, so are a lot of film favorites. But if being a swimming instructor makes such a hit with you—why change your diet? Some day a sleek haired cinema star may come to you to learn how, and you can turn him down. [That were fame enow!]

MOTHER OF FOUR: You have your hands and heart full, haven't you? Yes, I'd be glad to mail you the "dope" on scenario writing if you care to send a stamped and self addressed envelope repeating your request. Think you might turn out world winner on the side. I HOPE so!

"JIMMY'S" BACK

H. B. WARNER.
[Waite Photo.]

Best remembered as the safe-cracking hero of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the genial Mr. Warner, absent from these parts for four years, returns on Friday as chief adventurer in the "shoot-'em-up" melodrama, "Bull Dog Drummond," at Power's. We saw him last at the Blackstone in 1918, in something called "Among Those Present," whereof one of the authors was George S. Kaufman, now reaping the rewards of having helped write "To the Ladies."

Barrymore to Play Hamlet?

The New York Times.

New York, Aug. 26.—[Special.]—There seems no longer to be any doubt about John Barrymore's reappearance on the New York stage this season, which means that all three of the Barrymores will be theatrically in evidence. As for John Barrymore's play, those who are in position to know hint that it will be nothing less than "Hamlet." In fact, he is already deep in the study of the rôle. Lionel Barrymore, it will be remembered, will appear in the new O'Neill play, "The Fountain."

Although Mr. Belasco is still to utter his first official word on the subject, the Belasco office is at present abuzz with preparations for David Warfield's appearance as Shylock. Miss Mary Servoss will be the Portia, as is Belasco custom. "The Merchant of Venice," according to the present plan, will open out of town about Nov. 1, and probably will come to New York in December. Further news of the Belasco office is that Lionel Atwill will be seen some time during the season in Sacha Guitry's "Jacqueline," a serious play produced in Paris about a year ago.

The Equity, when last heard from, was still hesitating about its first program at the Forty-eighth Street. When these notes were compiled, a week ago, it looked as though Abby Merchant's "The New Englander" would be the selection, but during the last week a play called "Hospitality," written by an actor named Cunningham, loomed as the likely candidate. Like "The New Englander," "Hospitality" is a tragedy.

Not "Tons of Money," but Galsworthy's "Loyalties," will be the opening attraction of the season at the Gaiety. As for "Tons of Money," it seems to be one more proof that even the most popular of the London farces [always excepting "Charley's Aunt"] are not destined to be liked by Americans. "A Little Bit of Fluff" ran for three years in London, but those who saw one of its eight performances here will never cease to wonder why.

From various disinterested sources during the week came the news that Martin Brown's "The Exciters," produced in Atlantic City last Sunday night, is a considerable success. Mr. Brown has been writing decidedly good plays for a number of seasons, but a genuine success has hitherto managed to elude him. "The Exciters" will come to town in a few weeks. Both play and cast, particularly Miss Tallulah Bankhead and Allan Dinehart, were well received in Atlantic City.

Miss Grace La Rue, it is reported, has been engaged for the new "Music Box Revue," due in about six weeks.

Gregory Kelly and Miss Ruth Gordon will act "The First Year" on tour until the spring, when they will appear in Tarkington's "Bristol Glass."

Miss Laura Hope Crews and Roland Young are to appear together in Clare Kummer's "Pomeroy's Past."

Somerset Maugham's "East of Suez," with Miss Florence Eldridge and John Halliday in its leading rôles, will have its premiere in Atlantic City tomorrow night.

Iden Payne's "Dolly Jordan," with Miss Josephine Victor in its leading rôle, comes to town on Sept. 27.

"The Torch Bearers," coming to the Forty-eighth Street on Tuesday, spoofs the little theater movement.

Bairnsfather's "Old Bill, M. P." is coming here via Sam H. Harris. But it still seems likely that Mr. Coburn will again act the rôle.

Wilton Lackaye is still expected to go south with "The Circle," which means that "The Monster," which now enlists his services, must get a new doctor.

Summer Keeps Its Best Smiles for Stay at Homes

By Mme. X.

ALMOST all the apples in our garden have now dropped off and the penetrating perfume of their decay saturates the air. They came ahead of their usual schedule and so those of them that are picked up have to pass into apple sauce, puddings, and jellies sooner than in ordinary years, while the rest return to the earth from which they grew.

The crickets' shrill yell seems to grow more piercing every night. They, too, realize that this year it is the fashion to be ahead of the season. They are screaming out their lives as if it were already September. The yellow armies of golden rod are shaking their seeds broadcast, anxious to get through with their program, which is mainly arranged to annoy hay fever ites. In short, the most perfect of summers from the weather point of view is fast passing into history.

Those Chicagoans who went to other climes in search of pleasant summer weather made the great mistake. Nowhere else have those seeking fair, sweet days and cool, clear nights been so well treated as here. The Watson Blairs, Miss Keep, Mrs. Bryan Lathrop, and the Charles Strobels at York Harbor, Me., have had a fine line of rainy days and stormy nights handed out to them by the meteorological bureaus. The Joseph Colemans and Charles Dempsters in Santa Barbara, Cal., have had unusual heat and much morning fog, though you will never get a real enthusiast of that part of the country to admit even so insignificant an aberration on the part of the summers' customary perfection.

With the Travelers.

Those of our fellow citizens who have been summering abroad met daily rain for weeks at a time in the early summer. They wore their nice, new London silk umbrellas to shreds before mid July brought a little sunshine. The Robert G. McGanns and Walter Brewsters in England were especially afflicted by the continual deluge.

The McGanns, after spending several weeks in or near London, went up to Scotland, where they established themselves in a favorite summer resort about fifty miles north of Edinburgh, where British society delights to gather for the shooting and for golf. The sun, having deigned to shine at last, the end of their tour is turning out better than the beginning. They are sailing for home Sept. 6, home meaning Lake Forest.

Early in August an impressive delegation of well known Chicagoites gathered at Biarritz, that haunt of smart French and Spaniards on the Bay of Biscay. There were in this group Mr. and Mrs. William R. Odell, Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. C. M. Elly, and Frank Cramer.

Of course, the two principal rendezvous of these errant ones are the lovely villa of Mr. and Mrs. Roy McWilliams and the little cottage by the sea which Mrs. Joseph Winterbotham is occupying this summer. Miss Louise Winterbotham has joined her father in this country for the season. They have spent several weeks at Sugar Hill, N. H., where Mr. and Mrs. John H. Winterbotham, their two daughters, and Mrs. John R. Winterbotham are also to be found.

Last Week of Opera.

This is the last week of summer and also of Ravinia opera. Soon, all too soon, the katydids that nightly compete with the Chicago Symphony orchestra in that musical grove will have the field entirely to themselves. Le Chemineau will have wandered off for good and all. Zaza will cease from troubling. Manon will no longer choose the worse path. The Three Kings will refrain from loving the same fair lady, and the echoes of the most remarkable season of opera, from an artistic point of view, will be all that is left to Ravinia. I only hope that our coming season of civic opera will give us as good performances.

September walks in on us next Friday, introduced, socially speaking, by the afternoon bridge party which Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick is helping the local commission interested in Girl Scouts to give at her place, Villa Turicum, in Lake Forest. There will be at least a hundred tables of earnest women struggling with the intricacies of the fashionable game of the moment.

Who do you suppose invents, or evolves, the many different games of cards which sweep like—was I going to say pests, or just epidemics—across the civilized world? Did you ever hear of any Thomas Edison of card games? Or did any aspirant for fame ever seek it by claiming to be the author of auction bridge or whist or piquet?

Origin Wrapped in Mystery.

The last named is said to be the oldest of card games. It is certainly the best and most interesting of them. It was, according to history, the game originally devised to amuse the mad French king. It is full of etiquette, and is as different from our national game of poker as a frilled French courtier of the court of Louis XIV. would be from "Poker Bill" of the far west.

Auction bridge, the most popular game of today, is said to be of Persian or Greek extraction. The Persians have always been great players of delicate, brain requiring games. Checkers and chess both came out of Persia, and are both still played with passionate devotion in that part of the world. Chess is the most purely scientific of all games. It is entirely independent of chance and is based only on skill. It is especially adapted to those nations that live in hot countries where mental exertion is the chief form of exercise and recreation. But even there the origin of games is wrapped in mystery, and most of them probably go far back into the unrecorded past for their beginning.

The newest comer among card games is "Russian bank." Do you know it? It's being played much at men's clubs and among those who like something that tests all the faculties for alert observation and close attention. It is still such a recent addition to the game world that each person has a different set of rules governing the play.

Speak with Authority.

The chief thing in playing it is to get in your rules before your adversary has an opportunity to tell you how he or she plays it. Speak with authority, seem shocked at any other way of doing it, and as a last source of authority say: "It is played in this way at the Chicago club," or "at the Chicago Athletic club." It is a brave man or woman who will go beyond such an assertion.

Russian Bank is well devised to try the souls of those who play it. Your adversary has the right to pounce on you with a loud "check!" and stop your further play if you miss a possible play of your cards. This phase of the game engenders in those who become its devotees a certain fierce intentness and a hawklike quality which is paralyzing to the sensitive. After a bout at Russian Bank one feels a keener sympathy for the helpless sparrow over whom the chicken hawk hovers in brooding hope.

We have gone far from our Puritan ancestors in our outlook on life and morals. To them to play cards was anathema; to play them for money was to invite eternal damnation. Today those who play, but not for money, have to seek their adversaries among the inferior players. The skilled ones are only to be found in the ranks of those who require stakes to stimulate them to their best efforts.

So many clever folk think that a dinner that does not end up with a game of bridge is a slow affair that one has to take with a grain of salt the remark of one noncard playing wit:

"Thank God for the man who invented cards to keep the person who has nothing to say from saying it!"

Quick Thought Saves Him.

Usually on that popular 8 o'clock train which daily conveys the commercial and social magnates from Lake Forest and Highland Park to Chicago, the first comers flock to the west side of the cars to avoid the morning sun. Henceforth they will for some time to come flop down in the seats on the east side. That is, they will if they remember George A. McKinlock's bad accident and narrow escape from worse last Wednesday, when a door fell out of a passing freight car and hit the window frame of the car in which he was sitting just in front of him.

If he hadn't instinctively leaped across his neighbor, Mark Cummings, into the aisle his injuries would have been much worse. As it was he emerged with a fine crop of little cuts on face and hands.

Old Chicagoans, those whose memories date back to the World's fair days and before, will be interested to learn of the engagement of C. Norman Fay of Cambridge, Mass., to Miss Lillian Hale of the same place. Thirty years ago Mr. Fay was one of the conspicuous bachelors of Chicago. He made at that time a great deal of money out of the Chicago Telephone company, and he built him a house on Bellevue place, then newly opened up and considered the most fashionable street in town.

He entertained a great deal. He drove a high dog cart. He courted the belles of that time assiduously, but he waited until he was 74 years old to get engaged. This should give a new lease of life to some of our famous bacheiors of today. No, I am mentioning no names.

Musical Contest Among Chinese.

What promises to be an interesting and unusual occasion is set for Sept. 6 and is a musical contest among Chinese students. In this country there is a large number of young Chinese, boys and girls, who come over here to study at our schools and universities. Those attending midwest institutions are meeting in Evanston the first week in September for a conference.

The Friends of China, an organization started last winter in Chicago, largely through the enthusiasm and sympathy of Mrs. William H. Bush, has offered a gold medal for the best composition presented at this contest by a Chinese student playing a Chinese instrument. The contest will be narrowed to five or six and will take about an hour and a half. It is to be held in Lake Forest at Reid hall on the university campus which has been given for this purpose by the president, Mr. Moore.

It is expected that about 200 Chinese will come from the conference at Evanston to attend this musical contest, wherein the Chinese meistersinger or meisterspieler will be selected. After the concert, invitations to which will be sent out by the Friends of China, there will be a tea given by the association in the gardens of one of the famous places in Lake Forest.

The committee interested in furthering this unique affair is composed of Mrs. William H. Bush, Mrs. Hugh J. McBirney, Mrs. John V. Farwell, Mrs. J. M. Patterson, and Mrs. S. T. Chase.

Art Old as Time.

For two or three generations this country has acted as a sort of sponsor or friendly guardian for the Chinese, standing between them and a grasping, sordid world, a world that considered them as merely prey, a helpless people whose natural resources were lawful plunder and whose vices, such as opium, should be made a means of profit to other nations. We haven't tried to seize their harbors, nor to unload poppy crops on them, nor to control their railroads. So they regard us with a measure of confidence and send their sons and daughters to acquire at our universities and other institutions of learning the elements of our civilization.

There are some things that we can't teach them, however. One of these is art. Old as time, Chinese art has for uncounted ages led the world, and its influence is traceable in every phase of the occidental development of the many branches of what we call art. On the other hand, their music has small touch with ours. Their harmonies often seem crude dissonances. Their instruments compared to ours are, to our thinking, primitive, and futile.

One reason for this lack of understanding of their music on our part may be the fact that they divide and subdivide their tones much more intricately than we do, making combinations of sound that are strange and unattractive to our ears. It is worth our while to study this angle of the science of harmony. This concert will be interesting as a novelty and will surely be extremely picturesque.

I like the Chinese, don't you? There is a ripe, gentle, simple wisdom about the average man or woman of culture from the Celestial kingdom which is extremely delightful and in strong contrast to the aggressive and overassure form our western culture so often assumes.

The Mosquito Pest.

It's been a fine summer; lots of flowers and fruit; lots of sunshine; lots of moonlight; lots of pleasant people; lots of opera; lots of bridge; lots of golf; and lots and lots of mosquitoes! Have you heard them buzzing and felt them biting? If you've spent any time on the north shore you probably have. They have penetrated even the most thoroughly screened in houses. The variety which has been visiting us is a small, vicious beast, so tiny that it slips through the meshes of the usual wire netting with little damage to either wings or stings.

There was a time when flies and other insects were considered as an indispensable adjunct to the warm season, just as once such diseases as the black plague, leprosy, and smallpox were looked upon as unavoidable visitations of the wrath of God. Both of the latter have been conquered by knowledge and care, so these other dangerous pests are no longer in the class of the inevitable.

The Panama canal heroes, the three great G's, Goethals, Gorgas, and Gallard, taught the world the science of extermination. Today there are neither flies nor mosquitoes on the Canal Zone. Therefore, the fevers these insects spread, which decimated the armies of labor and filled the graveyards there, have been wiped out.

The measures for extermination the authorities on the isthmus took are possible anywhere. They are simple and effective, and consist in oiling every pocket of water or other place where water has an opportunity to stand ten days, and in abolishing or screening all manure heaps, the breeding place of flies.

Long Island Finds a Way.

On Long Island, where once mosquitoes were so deadly that whole districts were made absolutely uninhabitable, there has been a widespread movement which has resulted in such a successful destruction and prevention that the residents of those formerly afflicted regions can nowadays sit on their screened porches with entire safety and comfort. Each community has a mosquito committee. This committee raises the money necessary to maintain a man and to buy the oil necessary for the work. It also superintends the man in his work, which includes oiling for unscreened stable refuse and manure piles.

At Center Island, for instance, where a few years ago the roar of the mos-

ART AND ARTISTS

Artists Open Our Eyes to City's Unexplored Charm

By Eleanor Jewett.

"WHAT do you see to paint there?"

If once, at least a dozen times this question was asked of two artists who, one day not long ago, planted their stools and easels at the mouth of a narrow alley which opens off Michigan avenue not far from Ohio street.

For answer the painters pointed to an old red brick wall, mellowed by time and smoke to a curious dull hue, and to a lone tree, the long, green branches of which touched the ancient bricks lightly, as though to caress them.

Across the way was a garage, loud, clamorous, modern. But the wall was old and the tree was old. The two together were beautiful—if one took the time and trouble to look. As man after man passed that alley and inquired of the artists with almost a sneer what they were painting, each in turn was silenced by the beauty that confronted him when he was shown where to look, and took the time to look.

It is this way with many of the beauty places of Chicago, and doubtless of other towns and cities as well. Cities, except for certain specified landmarks that are catalogued as being beautiful, are not supposed to have much of attraction about them, from the point of view of transferable art. On the other hand, the country, with its streams and lakes, hills and meadows, is generally credited with beauty at every turn.

The country is beautiful. None realize it so clearly perhaps as the city bound dweller, but cities do not lack for corners and vistas of loveliness. The action of these two painters in boldly placing themselves, open to critical attack, at such a place as an alley mouth, taught many a citizen that day to look more carefully into the byways of towns.

The lake front of Chicago, again, is famed for its beauty. Several men, equipped with easel and stool, have been noticed this summer at work on the broad promenade that edges the Oak street beach. Though these artists are not subjected to question, the reason for their being there being clear, yet they do good inasmuch as their mere presence causes others to stop in their haste and look long at that beauty which the painter is transferring to his canvas. Good Samaritans are these Chicago artists who rescue our charms from the oblivion of the commonplace and translate them into potent, live realities for us to enjoy as we pass, because our eyes are open.

One of the most lovely paintings at present to be seen in the loan collections at the Art institute is "The Boy," by Eugene Carrière. Against a rather somber background a little boy, dressed in black, stands, pensively, remote, sad—very much alone. By his side, but really not with him, for the shadows in the little boy's eyes do not permit companionship, is a wide awake, smart, little brown dog with eyes like coals of fire and a ribbon of a tongue hot, red and ecstatic to kiss his master, were only the shadow lifted from between them.

"Mademoiselle Sa-Yintou," by Iacovleff, the young Russian artist, whose Mongolian types in his summer exhibit at the Art institute have been the subject of much interested discussion in art circles during these torrid days. The exhibit will come to a close at the first breath of fall.

Carrière, who was one of the great French painters, is represented in Paris by three beautiful paintings left by Mme. Carrière, who recently died, to the Louvre. There are, of course, other paintings by Carrière in Paris, but these three hanging in the Louvre galleries are probably the latest permanent acquisitions of this master by the city.

Another painting at the Art institute in which the note touched is one of sorrow is "The Last Minstrel," by George Henry Boughton, loaned by Charles L. Hutchinson. It shows a young girl who might, from her costume, be a heroine just stepped from the pages of Jane Austen, standing in cape and wind blown hat with a tiny bird in her hand, the victim of the storm, its little life wrested from it by the violence through which it had passed. Wet, pathetic, huddled in the warm palm, the little creature is the magnet for the rush of sympathy that floods one's consciousness in a deep understanding of the transitory sorrow Boughton's slim model felt at the touch of that brown feathered tragedy.

Plans are already under way for an exhibition to be held at the Art institute next winter. The Art Institute Alumni association will give its second retrospective exhibit of work of former students of the institute and of its instructors in the association, in December. Announcements have been sent out by Robert B. Harshe, director of the institute, stating that all branches of the fine and applied arts will be shown. Handicrafts, commercial illustrating, painting, sculpture, drawings, and prints are all included. The New York jury will meet Oct. 13, and the jury of award will meet in Chicago about the middle of December.

The California Art club has scheduled its thirteenth annual exhibition for Nov. 10 to Dec. 19. It will be held in the Los Angeles museum.

A number of painters, whose work is familiar to us in our exhibitions, have contributed to the success of the twenty-first annual exhibition of the Lyme Art association of Old Lyme, Conn. Among them are Carleton Wiggins, Wilson Irvine, Everett L. Warner, Lawton Parker, Guy Wiggins, Bruce Crane, William H. Howe, and Edward F. Rook.

The exhibit includes ninety-three paintings, a group of five pieces of sculpture by Bessie Potter Vonnoh, and about a hundred sketches. The W. E. Eaton purchase prize was awarded to "A Winter Night," by Gregory Smith, and another prize picture was Ivan Olinsky's "Leonore in Russian Blouse."

During a trip around the world Miss Alice Getty, traveling with her father, made the interesting collection of musical instruments that are now to be seen in Gunsaulus hall at the Art institute. There are instruments from Africa, India, China, Japan, Java, Siam, Burma, and other better known countries as well.

From Madagascar comes a gruesome lyre. It is made of a human skull, the top sawed off, and the opening covered with parchment. For decoration there is a fringe of the unlucky victim's hair. From Africa are the lutes made of cocoanut shells and ostrich eggs. The fiddle, made from a gourd, is still used by the African native in his thudding dance music.

A strain of civilized romance lurks in the verse inscribed within the polished body of an old Italian violin, a Latin couplet in faded sixteenth century ink that runs:

When I was alive I was in the forest and silent.
Now that I am cut down and dead, I sing sweetly.

Slams of Life

By J. P. McEVOY

TO AN AUTO SALESMAN LOOKING OVER THE OLD MODEL YOU ARE TRYING TO TRADE IN.

Salesman, hold your hand,
Lay off our little bus.
It may not look so grand,
But it's been good to us;
It may not shine so new,
Nor be so much to brag on;
It has a knock or two,
But it's a faithful wagon.

What's that? You hear a pound?
You think the pistons slap?
The rubber isn't sound?
It's just a bunch of scrap?
Salesman, now, beware,
Alluding at this cart—
Salesman, have a care,
Salesman, have a heart.

It's true she misses some;
The finish ain't so new;
The springs are on the bum;
She needs a tire or two.
But, gosh, she's been around
The justly famous map,
So what's a little pound,
And what's a little slap?

Salesman, listen here,
We love our little bus,
Take off that evil sneer,
You low and wicked cuss!
Don't shake them fenders, there.
Stop picking 'on our cart!
Salesman, have a care!
Salesman, have a heart!

PERTAINING TO PRESENT AND FUTURE MATTERS OF OPERA - -

BY EDWARD MOORE

Ravinia Begins and Ends Season with Novelties

RAVINIA began this summer's course of opera with a novelty, "Boris Godounoff"; it carried on with one in midseason, "Le Chemineau"; it approaches the close of its delectable series with a third, "L'Amico Fritz." The last named is so old as to be practically new, and is set for restoration to American hearing next Saturday night.

That Mr. Eckstein is mounting "L'Amico Fritz" does not, of course, carry a guarantee that this early work of Mascagni's classifies among the masterpieces. But, on the other hand, the withdrawal of the opera from American circulation soon after its importation in 1893 does not necessarily mean that it is not worth while now. The facts are that, as to the first, Mr. Eckstein is zealously seeking to build up a special Ravinia repertoire, and, as to the second, that the United States of 1893 was, in music, something else than is the United States of 1922. As a people, we rather fancied ourselves as culturally progressive because we were able to whistle the intermezzo of "Cavalleria Rusticana" in 1893, and were not at all ashamed that we were not ready to react to the new and longer work by the young lion who was everywhere hailed as the fearless precursor of "neo-Italian music." We still whistle the intermezzo, but we know a lot more about opera.

Rooted in a Famous Play.

I am indebted to the Ravinia management for the information that the American premiere of "L'Amico Fritz" was in Philadelphia, in 1893, under the late Gustave Hinrichs, recalled in Chicago, perhaps, as concertmaster for Theodore Thomas when that sturdy amalgam of conductor, impresario, and propagandist was making his brave effort in the '80s to establish music drama in English with the enterprise known as the National Opera company. When the venture, true to type, went on the rocks of nonattendance, Hinrichs gathered up the pieces, reassembled them, and put them into a commonwealth scheme. This, with Philadelphia as its home port, flourished for six or seven years, and made, in turn, the first American productions of "Cavalleria," "Pagliacci," and "L'Amico Fritz."

Like so many of the modern Italian composers, Mascagni went to the French theater for his libretto, and found it in the famous play of "L'Ami Fritz," by Erckmann-Chatrian, which was the joined name of two Alsatian writers of immense vogue in France because of this play and the better known one, "Le Juif Polonais," given here by a myriad of actors under the title of "The Bells." The tale is simple, direct, uninvolved—a pastoral with some of the essential atmosphere of "Le Chemineau," and with more than a hint that Erckmann and Chatrian, in compiling it, were not unmindful of the fact that Lessing wrote a great dramatic work on racial tolerance in "Nathan the Wise."

But one performance of "L'Amico Fritz" will be given this season. Its cast will be:

David	Giuseppe Danise
Suzel	Queena Mario
Fritz	Orville Harrold
Beppa	Anna Roselle
Federico	Giordano Paltrinieri
Hasezo	Pompilio Malatesta
Caterina	Flora Chagnlani

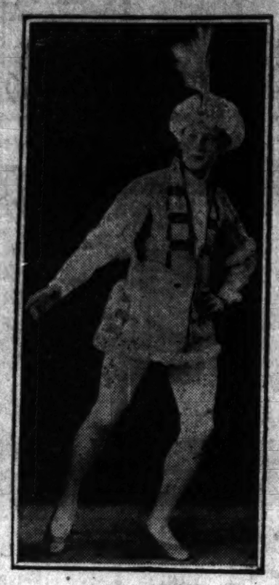
"Lakmé," Also, This Week.

Hardly older than "L'Amico Fritz" is Delibes' lovely "Lakmé," to be revived on Tuesday with a Lakmé new to Ravinia in the comely Pareto, with Mr. Harrold back in one of his good rôles as Gerald, Miss Gentle in one of her most effective impersonations as the dusky attendant, and Léon Rothier in a rightful guise as the high Hindu priest. A charming work, this, and now permanently back, I trust, into American circulation.



ADOLPH BOLM.

Adolph Bolm, with a reputation in two continents as an authority upon and a practitioner of the art of the dance, will be the ballet director of the Chicago opera next season. He first came to this city in 1916 as a leading member of the Serge de Diaghileff Ballet Russe after a term as star in the Imperial Opera of Petrograd, and will be further remembered through having staged and mimed the part of the dwarf in John Alden Carpenter's ballet, "The Birthday of the Infanta," at the Auditorium in 1919.

Other operas of the tenth Ravinia week will be "La Traviata" and "Lucia," for Pareto and Harrold; and a new combination of "Cavalleria Rusticana," with the garden scene from "The Jewels of the Madonna," and, of course, tonight's repetition of "Zaza," which of all the Ravinia operas has evoked the most enthusiastic popular reaction. The first American hearing of Saint-Saëns' "zoölogical fantasy," "The Animals' Carnival," and solos by the Misses Peralta and Mario will feature tomorrow night's concert, last of the series; and there are what the vaudeville managers would call "extra specials" for the final Thursday concert for the children.

Here is the week in outline:

Today at 3:15—Concert by the orchestra.

Tonight at 8:15—"Zaza," last time, with Gentle, Kingston, Roselle, Danise, et al., and Papi.

Tomorrow at 8:15—Final artists' concert, under Hasselmans, with Peralta and Mario as soloists.

Tuesday at 8:15—"Lakmé," first time this season, with Pareto, Harrold, Marr, Gentle, Rothier, Falco, Roselle, et al., and Hasselmans.

Wednesday at 8:15—"La Traviata," last time, with Pareto, Harrold, Falco, Danise, et al., and Papi.

Thursday at 3:15—Final children's concert, under Zukovsky, with a pantomime, "Teeny-Weeny Land," by the Children's Civic theater of Chicago, under Bertha M. Iles.

Thursday at 8:15—"Cavalleria Rusticana," last time, with Peralta, Kingston, Ballester, and Falco, and second act of "The Jewels of the Madonna," with Saroya, Kingston, and Ballester, and with Papi.

Friday at 8:15—"Lucia di Lammermoor," last time, with Pareto, Harrold, Ballester, D'Angelo, Paltrinieri, et al., and Papi.

Saturday at 3:15—Concert under Hasselmans.

Saturday at 8:15—"L'Amico Fritz," first time at Ravinia, with Danise, Mario, Harrold, Malatesta, Roselle, Paltrinieri, Cingolani, and with Papi.

Enter the Lyric Tower of Babel.

Now that the wind swept Ravinia, with its lovely music and entrancing vistas is getting ready to close until the summer of 1923, the attention of opera patrons turns to other operatic endeavor. There will be other opera, and plenty of it, more than Chicago has ever known before.

The Chicago Civic Opera company—why, when there was a whole dictionary of words to choose from, they should have selected that name is a managerial mystery—will naturally take the leading position. Nov. 13 is the opening date, and for ten weeks thereafter the grand and glorious show of tunes and scenic display, world famous singers and gifted conductors, not to forget the terpsichorean delights of the ballet, will hold the stage of the Auditorium.

The Russian Opera company, which did yeoman service at the Olympic theater last spring, is coming back with additional singers, new scenery, a better orchestra, and a répertoire of some works not given before and still new to the United States. Experience with its last spring were enjoyable, and its return promises to make them more so.

Direct from Germany.

Another opera company, this time from Germany, is coming to America for the first time, with Chicago included on its itinerary. It is said to number 250 persons, principals, chorus, orchestra, and conductors. Its répertoire is chiefly Wagnerian and includes "Tannhäuser," "Lohengrin," "Tristan and Isolde," "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," and "The Flying Dutchman," also Strauss' "Salome" and Paul Scheinpflug's "Das Hofconzert," which is new to this country.

Finally, the earnest band of propagandists who are devoted to the cause of opera in English, and more particularly the encouragement of American opera, will present some of the American works in what is advertised as "chamber opera or recital form" at the Playhouse. Twelve performances will be given, on the first and third Wednesday mornings of November, January, February, March, and April.

The works thus far on the list are Charles Wakefield Cadman's "Shanewis," which has seen service at the Metropolitan; John Adam Hugo's "The Temple Dancer"; Arthur Nevin's "Daughter of the Forest," once sung by the Chicago Opera company; Theodore Stearns' "The Snow Bird," and Harvey Worthington Loomis' "The Traitor Mandolin."

QUEENA MARIO.
[Harisock Photo.]

This young American soprano with an Italian stage name has been selected to sing the chief feminine role in the last new piece to be put on at Ravinia this summer. She will appear as Suzel in Mascagni's "L'Amico Fritz" next Saturday night.

Among the artists—the list is still incomplete—will be Beryl Brown, Edna Showalter, Olive June Lacey, Eve Gordon Horadesky, Edith Allan, Anna d'Argel, Gladys Swarthout, Mark Love, Gilbert Wilson, Joel Lay, and Eugene Dressler.

Chicago Theater to Resume Concerts.

The Chicago Theater Symphony orchestra will begin its second season of Sunday noon concerts Sept. 10, and Conductor Nathaniel Finston promises even more pretentious programs than were given last winter. Some time after Jan. 1 a feature will be made of the first performance of the prize winning symphonic works which are now being entered in the Balaban & Katz prize of $1,000 for the best composition for full orchestra. The prize winning work will be played first, then the next five in order of merit will be performed on subsequent Sundays.

The orchestra, following last year's policy, will be made up of 100 musicians picked from the orchestras of the Chicago, Riviera, Tivoli, and Central Park theaters. All concerts will take place from 11:45 to 12:45 on Sundays, and each will have a soloist. Director Finston sends word that he plans to play many American compositions, as well as foreign works. All the great composers will form the backbone of the season's offerings, with simpler and lighter forms of music also having a place.

Here and There with the Melodists.

Sousa's tour is to be brief: he says he is eager to get to work on an opera in jazz, whether or not Mary Garden is serious in desiring to sing in such a work; but he will take in Chicago as he flits, reaching here of a Sunday in October.

Grand opera observation by Louis Harrison, here in "To the Ladies!": "When, in 1891, I wrote 'The Isle of Champagne,' it was idle, casual fun in what I trusted was the Gilbertian vein for the amusement of a free, unthirsty people. What a theme for a tragic opera it would make today! The exsiccation of a nation! But a Moussorgsky—nay, a Berlioz!—were needed to set it." Mr. Harrison gets into this department because of that "exsiccation."

Maria Olk-Roehik, violinist; Elizabeth Olk-Roehik, cellist; Edna Hall-Frain, pianist; and Eva Gordon-Horadesky, contralto, will give a concert Thursday night for the benefit of the American Committee for Relief of Russian children. It will take place at the studio of Ernst Roehik, 5809 Harper avenue.

Feodor Chaliapine has, it is said, succeeded in getting his family out of Russia, and is now at Bad Homburg, Germany. He will begin a concert tour of England Sept. 15, and come to this country for another tour when he has finished. One report is to the effect that he intends to remain here.

A rumor, not yet authenticated, is that Ganna Walska is to have a season of opera in Paris next winter in the opera house opened in the Champs Elysées in 1914 by the Boston company, and with Muratore as her principal associate. It is known that the tenor has canceled his American concert tour for next season.

Galli-Curci is singing this afternoon at Atlantic City, having come out of her summer's retirement in the Catskills for the purpose. Most of her vacation time has been spent in watching her new home being built.

Festa di Giardino, an al fresco musical event for the benefit of poor Italian children of Chicago, will take place in the gardens of Mrs. Herbert Drew of Evanston tomorrow night. The program will be presented by Miss Olga Menn, Miss Esther Muller, Vittorio Trevisan, Francesco Daddi, George G. Smith, and members of the Chicago Symphony orchestra. In case of rain the event will be transferred to the Woman's club of Evanston.

John Charles Thomas, who has sung much here and there about the country in operetta, is going in for song recitals. He has already given one in London, and will give another there Oct. 1, with Luisa Tetrazzini as his lyric co-worker. He will begin an American recital tour Oct. 15.

THE PARADE

By Guy Lee.

Of all the silly nonsense that this crazy world delights in
The parade is most nonsensical to me;
A lot of people doll themselves in costumes they are frights in,
Inviting stares and most unholy glee.
They sweat and fret their dogs until they have to take a layoff
To rest 'em up, their labors to resume.
There are plenty things I'd like to join if I could get a day off,
But one of which a marchfest isn't whom.

There is only one procession you shall ever get me into,
And I'd dodge that, too, by ginger, if I could.
I hope and trust it's late in life ere I shall thus begin to Indulge the habit—and it's understood
That I intend to leave the crowd before the party's over;
I'll go half way—a fifty-fifty whack;
But when they halt the hearse amid the daisies and the clover
I stop right there—I'm never coming back!

ASTRONOMY

By S. F. Maxwell.

DID you ever try to photograph the stars? With a little ingenuity you can rig up a camera that will turn the trick very well.

The sky moves. It would not do to merely aim at the stars and expose, because a picture taken in this way would consist of streaks and not dots.

Make a Star Camera This Way.

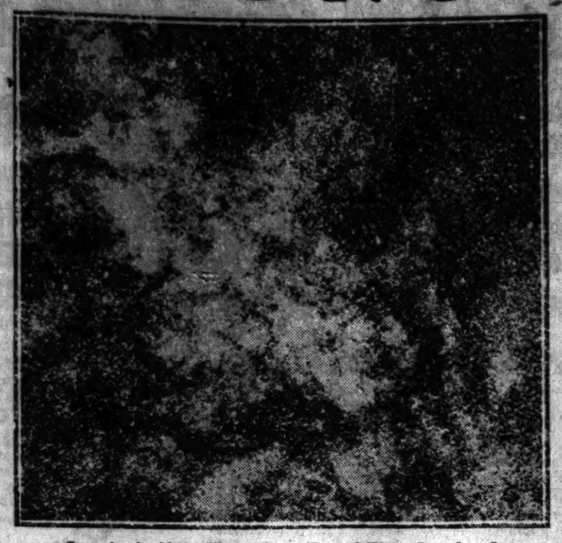
As the earth turns over toward the east the camera must turn backward to the west. Find out what your latitude is, either from a map or by observing the elevation of the north star above the horizon. Cut a block of wood in the shape of a wedge, the angle of which equals your latitude. Bore a hole through it and insert a long bolt. Plane off the upper face of the wedge, or cover it with sheet metal, for this is to be a bearing surface. Saw out a board to rotate upon center, insert the bolt, and screw board and wedge loosely together.

Mount your camera on trunions. Cut two uprights, run a bolt between, screw them to the bearing board, and place a block between for the camera to rest on.

Some sort of a sight is necessary. If you have a spyglass or telescope, mount two cross hairs in the diaphragm of the lens combination nearest the eye. If you have no glass, a long pole such as a clothesline stick will do. Make two large sights of sheet iron, after the fashion of gun sights. Paint them white and fix the sighting device solidly to the camera block, so that the two turn together.

Some time before dark focus the camera on distant objects, such as steeples or tree tops. Then close the shutter, insert the film or plate, and wait until the sky grows very dark, with no trace of sunset remaining. Aim the outfit at the constellation you wish to photograph, set your sights on some particularly bright star, open the shutter, and expose.

It will require about six minutes of exposure per magnitude with an ordinary camera to get stars. In six minutes the first magnitude ones, as Vega, Deneb, Antares, and Arcturus appear, in twelve minutes you have the second magnitude, in eighteen the third, in twenty-four the fourth, and so on. All this time you must carefully hold the sights upon the star. It is a tedious process, but if you can hold out for two hours or more you will have a negative that will surprise you. On it will be the images of suns never seen by human eye, even with the biggest telescopes.



Stars in the Milky Way. Every One of These Dots Is a Sun.

WAR

A PHALANX PIERCES.

THE phalanx, brought to perfection by Alexander the Great, is a formation for piercing an opposing line. Picked troops are massed solidly together, somewhat in the shape of a wedge, and are driven with irresistible force through a small portion of the enemies' front.

A phalanx is a limited arm. The only acts it does well are advancing and retreating, but even for doing them successfully the severest discipline is necessary. A phalanx has no power whatever to defend its flanks, and so special troops must always be provided for that purpose.

At Arbela Alexander found the Persian line three times as long as his own. He marched obliginglly down Darius' front, found a weak spot between the center and one wing, and of the high perfection of his screen of the Persian hosts. In so doing he was flanked three times, but the Persians' blows fell helplessly because plowed obliquely back through the troops.

In the world war both the allies and the central powers used the phalanx movement in most of the great drives.

BEST SELLERS OF THE AGES

pages on the ordinary affairs of commonplace persons. And five more books of the same! Go to! I have a life to live!"

So he did.

'Tis psychic, constitutional. "Do you like Jane Austen?" "No!" That is one kind of mind. "Do you like Jane Austen?" "I do!" And that is another. 'Tis all just as decisive as a credo.

Nor should the risk be run. Let not the burden and bother of a recommendation repel men and women from Jane Austen, but let the pride of discovery lure them to her. I know not how that is to be effected. Perhaps by leaving the book about—with no others nigh. I tried that once in my home with a volume of Jane's letters, and for the three hours ensuing there came from the most judicious person I know no sound save occasional laughter—soft and relishing—and a semi-occasional "O, do listen to this!"

It was this—

. . . Miss Blackford is agreeable enough. I do not want people to be very agreeable, as it saves me the trouble of liking them a great deal.

And this, read out to me on a sweltering August night:

What dreadful hot weather we have! It keeps one in a continual state of inelegance.

And again:

My mother continues hearty; her appetite and nights are very good, but she sometimes complains of an asthma, a dropsy, water in her chest, and a liver disorder.

Still again:

I shall not write again for many days; perhaps a little repose may restore my regard for a pen.

I told you that Miss Austen was fastidious. She believed that all things could be done decorously:

Letty is with Mary at present, of course exceedingly happy, and in raptures with the child. Mary does not manage matters in such a way as to make me want to lay in myself. She is not tidy enough in her appearance, she has no dressing gown to sit up in; her curtains are all too thin, and things are not in that comfort and style about her which are necessary to make such a situation an enviable one. Elizabeth was really a pretty object with her nice clean cap put on so tidily and her dress so uniformly white and orderly.

In some of her portraits Jane is shown in a cap, and there has been argument as to why she took to caps so early in life. There need have been none, for, writing to Cassandra in December, 1798, when she was three and twenty, she says:

I have made myself two or three caps to wear of evenings since I came home, and they save me a world of torment as to hairdressing, which at present gives me no trouble beyond washing and brushing, for my long hair is always plaited up out of sight, and my short hair curls well enough to want no papering. I have had it cut lately by Mr. Butler.

And so the women love the Jane of the ninety-four letters. The Jane of the novels is quite as whimsical and intimate a chronicler as the Jane of the letters. But who, after all, shall convey to another the precise charm of Jane Austen? 'Tis too elusive and too leisurely for swift impartment, because so much of it proceeds from and is dependent on the settings—and her settings are extensive and detailed. That charm must be absorbed. Often and often her most delicious effects are produced in a line and come as the swift but soft culmination of many lines of leisurely filigree. Signal instances of this are three little jabs of type which I have selected to illustrate the proud, pompous, meddling, unmerciful, overbearing dowager, Lady Catherine de Bourgh of "Pride and Prejudice." It is a piece of characterization which deserves to rank in novelistic portraiture with Anthony Trollope's Mrs. Proudie, and, even as Anthony knew that Mrs. Proudie was good work, so Jane loved Lady Catherine with a craftsman's love and frankly proclaimed her good work.

These are the jabs:

Whenever any of the cottagers were disposed to be quarrelsome, discontented, or too poor, she sallied forth into the village to settle their differences, silence their complaints, and scold them into harmony and plenty.

Lady Catherine had many other questions to ask respecting their journey, and as she did not answer them all herself, attention was necessary.

The party then gathered round the fire to hear Lady Catherine determine what weather they were to have on the morrow.

That is typical Jane Austen. And when, Augustine Birrell used to say, the lover of Jane Austen (the Janeite) reads that typical matter "the smile of satisfaction, betraying the deep inward peace they never fail to beget, widens, like a circle in the water, as he remembers (and he is careful always to remember) how his dearest friend, who has been so successful in life, can no more read Miss Austen than he can the Moabitish stone."

Sometimes she tells a page in a line or two. Elizabeth and Jane Bennet (the heroines of "Pride and Prejudice") are discussing the proud, austere, high minded, misunderstood Darcy, who repels people, and the plausible, superficially winning but essentially false Wickham, and Jane remarks:

There certainly was some great mismanagement in the education of those two young men. One has got all the goodness, and the other all the appearance of it.

And again Elizabeth on Darcy:

The general prejudice against Mr. Darcy is so violent that it would be the death of half the good people in Meryton to attempt to place him in an amiable light. I am not equal to it.

Elizabeth confesses that she, like the rest, had been o'er ready to dislike Darcy:

I meant to be uncommonly clever in taking so decided a dislike to him, without any reason. It is such a spur to one's genius, such an opening for wit, to have a dislike of that kind. One may be continually abusive without saying anything just; but one cannot always be laughing at a man without now and then stumbling on something witty.

Jane Bennet is the equable trustful, extenuating sister; Elizabeth is keen-eyed, rather aloof, and, like her creator, fastidious and witty. Jane, trying to extenuate a swain who seems faithless, says:

Women fancy admiration means more than it does.

ELIZABETH—And men take care that they should.

Thus, in two lines, the Roentgen ray is shot through and through two natures.

Mrs. Gardiner, also discussing the seemingly faithless Bingley, asks:

Pray, how violent was Mr. Bingley's love?

The question evokes this treasure—'tis worthy of Goldsmith at his best:

ELIZABETH—I never saw a more promising inclination; he was growing quite inattentive to other people. . . . At his own ball he offended two or three young ladies by not asking them to dance and I spoke to him twice myself without receiving an answer. Could there be finer symptoms? Is not general incivility the very essence of love?

Mr. Howells, a perfect Janeite, once said ("Heroines of Fiction") that Mrs. Bennet "is probably the most entire and perfect simpleton ever drawn in fiction," and concerning that lady, with her steady flow of lamentation about the entail and her nerves, I shall remember, and treasure, till I die these nine marble-hewn words—

Mrs. Bennet was restored to her usual querulous serenity.

And can you ever forget this about Lady Lucas, bored at the party by Mrs. Bennet's vaingloriousness:

And Lady Lucas, who had been long yawning at the repetition of delights which she saw no likelihood of sharing was left to the comforts of cold ham and chicken.

Grant me just one more quote! To this, illustrating Mr. Bennet's suave cynicism in managing a woman who would have driven most men to murder, you must attend—

MR. BENNET—My dear, I have two small favors to request. First, that you will allow me the free use of my understanding on the present occasion; and, secondly, of my room. I shall be glad to have the library to myself as soon as may be.

Such is the charm of Jane Austen. You "get it," as the boys say, or you do not.

The touch is all.

And, whether you do or do not, the battle—the mutual rancor, rather—of the Janeites and the non-Janeites remains among the most curious and fascinating chapters in literary history. The artists, the masters, as emphatically as we laymen, have disagreed about dear, shrewd, observant, slightly feline, graceful Jane. George the Fourth admired her—it is one of the two good things (I forget the other) that I ever read about that regal cad—and when he was prince regent he directed Mr. Clarke, his librarian, to place a copy of "Pride and Prejudice" in every one of the residences he occupied. He also intimated that Miss Austen might dedicate her next book to him, and, I am sorry to say, she did it. You may read the slavish words on the second leaf of "Emma." Benjamin Disraeli [Lord Beaconsfield] read "Pride and Prejudice" seventeen times, he said, but he was a heavy yarner, and Sir Walter Scott read it thrice. "Emma" and "Northanger Abbey" were his favorites and he often read chapters of them to his evening circle. George Eliot pronounced Jane "the greatest artist that has ever written," using the term "artist," she said, "to signify the most perfect master over the means to her end." But Charlotte Brontë said that Jane was "only shrewd and observant . . . more real than true, but she cannot be great." Tennyson read and reread her and, like Macauley, named her with Shakespeare. So did Goldwin Smith. But Longfellow's admiration was very carefully qualified. Sainte-Beuve uttered a lordly phrase about her: He proclaimed her "new and ancient, easily contemporaneous with every age," but so deft and searching a satirist as W. S. Gilbert ("Mikado") admitted "an unexplained dislike for her." Miss Mitford ("Our Village") once told a niece of Jane's that she "would give a hand" if she could write like Jane, but Mark Twain said that "any library that does not contain a set of Jane Austen is a good library."

So I call her "the sweetheart of literature," adored by many, only piquing and plaguing others.

There is a piquant story about an old verger of Winchester cathedral. Once he stopped a pigrim to the grave with the faltering question: "What was there particular, sir, about Miss Austen that so many people should want to see her grave?"

Well, verger, for one thing—

SHE WROTE HONESTLY.

Now I am going to fare into that lovely Laurentian region that is more French than France itself is today, and I am not going to look into a book for a fortnight. (Thereat I hear a voice remarking—with a certain plaintiveness—"But you always say that!") However, all agreeing, this modest Chautauqua will be resumed on Sunday, Sept. 17, with a little paper on—

The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin.

TABLOID BOOK REVIEW

say about some bond business? Imagine a publisher making one brilliant success after another, shoveling in his shekels, little by little getting control of all the publishing business in the world—and devoting his phenomenal profits to the support of real literature! Providing artists with spiritual backgrounds they yearned for, feeding up, as it were, a generation of literary prize winners which would improve the strain and finally completely supplant the old style author—the way that pug dogs have been supplanted.

Cornering the market to improve it—ah, that's an amusing idea. But it's what always comes with success—the idea of improving the world. The thing that intrigues men at first is the notion of succeeding, of "cornering" something, whether it be wheat, or the gefüllte fish industry, or the year's sales in novels. And once they corner their quarry they set about improving the world, or their own little corner of it.

Look at H. G. Wells. He was a perfectly good novelist, a charming novelist, the best novelist writing in English—with "The Research Magnificent." And then, having written a masterpiece, he started to improve the state of the world. I don't mean to say that the world isn't in need of all the improving that any of us can give it; that unless we do have some ideal of improving it "mankind is but a kind of skin disease upon a planet." "This life is not good enough for me," is the cry of every artist, a cry which becomes most articulate in his heart when he has attained something of his success. There is the instinct to "do something worth while," to remold the world with the power acquired—unless, of course, success merely goes to the head of the person who attained it by fortuitous circumstances and he uses it merely to add to his own personal glory.

Of "Babbitt" we will speak Sunday after next. It is "This Freedom" which has brought up this argument in the mind of this reviewer. Three books which were novels, no more, extremely good ones, but nothing that seemed to be influencing in any way the thought of the world, were followed by "If Winter Comes," which leaped into amazing popularity both in England and in America. Mr. Hutchinson is, from all accounts of him, an extremely sensitive, shy person, not at all convinced that he is a great writer, certain only that he is doing what pleases himself most by writing novels. He wouldn't even go to Oberammergau to write some newspaper articles about the Passion Play because, he assured those who offered to send him at a rather startlingly princely sum, he wasn't a trained newspaper writer and he wouldn't be able to write anything in a hurry that would be worth publishing, let-alone worth the huge sum that he had been offered.

Can't you imagine a man of his type—the author of such a book as "The Clean Heart" and the creator of such a sensitive character as Mark Sabre—when suddenly confronted with an enormous success such as "If Winter Comes" had, saying to himself with gravity, "I had no idea I should ever write a book that would be read in the underground and in the subway and in trans-continental trains that slide across that great country they call the United States of America, by men and women in little towns in Devon and in log cabins along the western frontiers and God knows where (not blasphemously, but somewhat reverently at the thought that his book had gone to spots unknown and never to be known to himself). But I've done it somehow. And now, since that is the case, since I may be an influence in the world despite myself, I mustn't write just novels any longer. I must help to make the world better, to make it understand itself."

With that thought in his mind he—remember this is all guesswork on my part—cast his eye about modern life to see what part of it might lend itself to being made better to the best advantage; what part that hadn't already been the inspiration of some other zealot. And he saw the modern woman, the successful business woman, and her relations with her husband and her children, and he said to himself: "Here is my work. I will show that the home is the unit of any successful society; that the home demands a head; that this freedom, this goal of modern womankind, is a selfish and a damning thing for the future of the world." That is exactly what he has done. From a novelist, just a novelist, A. S. M. Hutchinson has turned into a social reformer.

It would be unfair for you to think that "This Freedom" isn't a good story. It is. It is at times so real, so vivid, so vital, that you wonder how he could have known, how any one could have known, and, knowing, how he can make you know. The gradual growth of Rosalie—the heroine—away from her mother, the gradual loosening of the bonds which tied her to sentiment and loosened her to the freedom of sensibleness, little moments in her childhood when she realized that this is a man's world, other moments in her young womanhood when she proved to herself that it might be a woman's world, also—those are all things to remember. They are all things to think about. But since Mr. Hutchinson is trying to repay the world for his success by helping it, he has acquired the attitude of all reformers, of all press agents for a cause. He has not stopped at melodrama to attain his ends. They all feel that they would be poor protagonists of an idea if they left their readers with only one poignant wound as a memory. He stabs again and again, unnecessarily and inartistically from the point of view of art, but from the point of view of propaganda with the same effectiveness as Simon Legree and the death of little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Mr. Hutchinson has also changed his style of writing—adapted his rather flowing, pleasant style to propaganda by making it impressionistic, almost, in its staccato qualities. He has changed his easy going method of telling a story to one in which the denouement is constantly hinted at, in which the reader's mind is kept constantly upon the idea.

And will the public like being reformed? It will, unless I am an even poorer guesser than I suspect, purr with delight. It will buy "This Freedom" in even greater numbers than it bought "If Winter Comes." It will read it with intensity, and it will look into its own family groups and see the ravages of this freedom. It will, if it is a youngish girl, give up its hopes of becoming the head of the woman's department in the Beangrowers' National bank, and take in all of the magazines devoted to home making and the care of children. It will, if it is a youngish man, stop calling on the rising young business woman and start calling on the daughter of the village carpenter who is noted for her preserves and her eyelet embroidery. It will make young mothers and fathers think more about what's coming to their children. It will revive the old question, "What is home without a mother?"

"This Freedom" is effective propaganda against this modern freedom of women because it seems to be so very fair, so very restrained, so very logical—until he piles a couple of Ossas on the Pelion of melodrama at the end.

Every one is going to read it and talk about it, if only because it is a challenge.

[Note.—The publication date of "This Freedom" is Sept. 1, which means that you can buy it next Friday, but not before. When a book is published in such an enormous edition as "This Freedom"—100,000 copies in the first edition, on presses which print twenty copies a minute, there must of necessity be a definite date set upon which the whole edition will be officially off the presses and "published." This advance review is merely that you may know about it before any one else does.]

[Next week "One of Ours," by Willa Cather, author of "My Antonia."]

Every Man His Own Reviewer.

Stephen Graham, author of "Tramping with a Poet in the Rockies," ought to know more about his own book than I do, so I merely share with you a note he sent me about it from England:

STEPHEN GRAHAM.

The tramp in the Rockies which Stephen Graham and Vachel Lindsay did together last summer is being commemorated in a book called "Tramping with a Poet in the Rockies." It is a humorously poetic book interspersed with emblems, humorous pictures, and poetical harangues. Each chapter has a tailpiece of birds or coffee pots or leaves, according to the degree of poetic fervor reached in the chapter. Vachel Lindsay has been lecturing on this tramp in America. Graham has been doing the same thing in England. Stephen Graham is now off to Central America, climbing that "peak in Darien." He promises to visit Chicago in the fall.

Books Suppressed.

Since Mr. John J. Kidd was fined $1,000 a month or so ago for selling a copy of Rabelais—for sending it through the mails—the Society for the Suppression of Vice has been very active:

In New York on the 11th of this month they visited the publishing offices of Mr. Thomas Seltzer with a warrant to cover the seizure of "Women in Love," by D. H. Lawrence (issued in 1920 in a limited edition), "A Young Girl's Diary" (which has been selling for a year and which had been commended by President G. Stanley Hall, Charles Rann Kennedy, and others), and "Casanova's Homecoming," by Arthur Schnitzler.

Copies of "A Young Girl's Diary" were also taken from Brentano's shelves.

In Boston the Watch and Ward society has been the means of the disappearance from all bookstores of "Simon Called Peter."

And there's "Ulysses," James Joyce's 900 page novel, which has been refused admittance into the United States. (It was published in France by an English society.) The events of twenty-four hours are covered in the book. It would take some one with all the leisure in the world, as well as the most highly sensitized nose for naughtiness, to plow through those seemingly endless hundreds of closely printed pages.

JOHN DRINKWATER.

Mr. Drinkwater in His Less Obvious Manner.

Not that it's new, but you may have missed John Drinkwater's "Cotswold Characters," an amusing little volume about that part of England which is best known as the original habitat of an increasingly popular type of country house. The woodcuts are almost as good as the text, and both are for the few who like the obscure charm of John Drinkwater's poems rather than the somewhat obviousness of his famous play.

"Nets to Catch the Wind."

"Nets to Catch the Wind" is a first volume of poetry by Elinor Wylie and, like most first volumes of poetry, slim and frail. The difference between this one and most others is that there is real loveliness, real lyricism, real delicacy in this one. Here is a breath of its fragrance in the—

MADMAN'S SONG.

Better to see your cheek grown hollow,
Better to see your temple worn,
Than to forget to follow, follow,
After the sound of a silver horn.

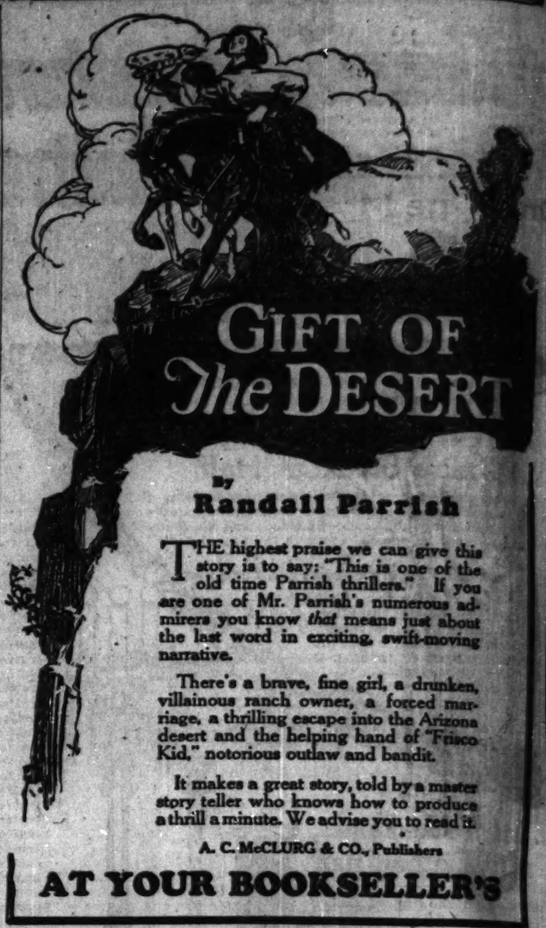
A Hint to Lovesick Maidens About to Take Poison.

A friend of ours called my attention to an amusing passage in Ethel Smythe's "Streaks of Life," a volume of essays and reminiscences, sometimes amusing, sometimes grave, but always readable. In the long paper on the Empress Eugenie, Miss Smythe tells a tale of the empress' essay in passion when she was still Mlle. de Montijo. She was living with her sister, the Duchess d'Albe. A certain duke, becoming infatuated with the duchess, made love to the little sister as a means of gaining easy access to the house. The little sister fell desperately in love with him. When the truth dawned upon her she took poison and when the fact was discovered nothing could induce her to take the antidote. As a last recourse the man she loved was brought to her bedside. As he bent over her he whispered, "Where are my letters?" Whereupon the lady—young as she was—exclaimed, "You are like Achilles' spear that healed the wounds it made," and forthwith swallowed the antidote and recovered.



GIFT OF The DESERT

By Randall Parrish

THE highest praise we can give this story is to say: "This is one of the old time Parrish thrillers." If you are one of Mr. Parrish's numerous admirers you know that means just about the last word in exciting, swift-moving narrative.

There's a brave, fine girl, a drunken, villainous ranch owner, a forced marriage, a thrilling escape into the Arizona desert and the helping hand of "Frisco Kid," notorious outlaw and bandit.

It makes a great story, told by a master story teller who knows how to produce a thrill a minute. We advise you to read it.

THE BREATH OF SCANDAL

The New York Herald says: "Mr. Balmer's novel is full of solid food for reflection. The chief theme may be stated, roughly, as the weakening of the old ideals of marriage and of family life, the effect upon the children of open disagreement between father and mother, divorce, and the gradual recognition of the fact that many husbands and fathers are living an extra-marital existence, while keeping up appearances at home. . . . The book has many fine qualities, and will hold the attention of any reader.

The Vehement Flame
By MARGARET DELAND

"The Most Talked of Novel in Years"

St. Paul Daily News says: "By all means, read it! Read it because it is alive.

"Edith, Maurice, Eleanor, Lily—these people live. The springs that animate them are not explained psychologically, but revealed emotionally. We feel them. The Vehement Flame burns. And like moths we circle about the fire, and, though we singe for it, we cannot leave it."

THE DAY OF THE BEAST
By ZANE GREY
author of "To The Last Man," "The Mysterious Rider," "The Man of the Forest," etc.

Not a regular Zane Grey western novel — nor the beginning of a new Zane Grey. Just the author's tribute to the American men in the service. The story of a returned soldier who cleans up his home town. The purpose of the book is best expressed in Zane Grey's dedication: "Herein is embodied my tribute to the American men who gave themselves to the service in the great war, and my sleepless and eternal gratitude for what they did for me."

RIDGWELL CULLUM'S NOVEL
The MAN in the TWILIGHT

He was the man with the "iron guts" needed to take charge of the greatest enterprise in the world's paper industry. She was the emissary of the colossal foreign corporation determined to crush all opposition. And far away, in the forests of desolate Labrador, waged the battle of wits and violence between two giants of industry, the battle of love and loyalty between two superb characters. And in the background, uncannily anticipating every move in the drama, hovers "the man in the twilight." A gripping novel, much in the manner of "The Way of the Strong," but more powerful, more intense, more thrilling.

MAN

THERE ARE FEW ANCIENT GREEKS IN GREECE.

HOMER, the great Greek poet, is thought to have lived about 1000 B. C. The Iliad and Odyssey are the first authentic historical records we have of this gifted people. That the poems are essentially historical has been abundantly proved by the excavations of Schliemann. This enthusiastic Homeric student not only uncovered the Troy of Homer's time; he found the tomb of Agamemnon, and what is believed to be the latter's drinking cup.

The Homeric poems reveal a people just emerging from the bronze age into the iron age. Cremation of the dead, a practically universal custom of the bronze age, is still practiced but beside it is the mausoleum fashion of burial of the iron age, a custom that is largely followed to this day.

The people Homer mentions are invariably fair. Ulysses himself is described as having wavy yellow hair and of a short stature. Such painting from these periods as have come down to us depict a people among whom red hair was common, if not the rule.

Anthropologists now know more of the history and races of ancient Greece than the ancient Greeks themselves did. We have the advantage of perspective and a very much wider view of geography than any nation of the past. The Homeric Greeks were Aryan. They migrated into Greece from somewhere along the Baltic slopes of the Carpathian mountains.

There was not one Grecian migration, but many. The earliest ones are lost in antiquity. As long ago as 10,000 B. C. blonde people were pushing down into what is now Crete and Cyprus and supplanting the native civilization there. The four waves of invasion that we know most about are the Minoan, the Eolian, the Ionian, and the Dorian. The Minoans built the metropolis of Cnossus in Crete, whose ruins are still grand. The Homeric heroes were Minoans, but the Trojans, upon whom they warred, were Eolians. The Eolians were few in number.

Marks of a Grecian Celt.

They went into Asia Minor and were soon swallowed up in the native races there. The Ionians fared better. Athens was an Ionian city, and lived to see her Ionian kinsmen across the Aegean brought under the heel of the Persians. The Dorians were the latest comers. They were purer Nordic than the rest, as well as fiercer and more barbarous. Eventually they conquered all of Greece. The Greek colony cities, whose stories consume so much of Greek history, were founded by older Grecian peoples fleeing from the Dorians.

Aryan people in Greece even in the most populous places, and at the hight of their power were amazingly few. The aboriginal people of the country, then as now, were Pelasgian Mediterraneans of the Semitic race. In Sparta, at the peak of Spartan ability, there were perhaps 3,000 Spartan men. This handful of Nordics ruled and held in subjection 2,500,000 helots, or natives. All the ancient Greek cities and states were, in fact, armed camps, and their citizenships for a long time were strictly limited to blondes. Athens enfranchised her Semitic population at the hight of her glory, and dropped to the station of a provincial town within the space of memory of one man.

Very little of the blood of ancient Greece is to be found in the Greece of today. Only on a few islands that are remote from the traffic of the world has the strain been preserved. But Greek types are fairly common in northern Germany and in England. They stand midway between Celts and Nordics in evolution. They have long faces and long heads, like Nordics, but their teeth, their bones, and their minds are unmistakably Celtic.

HE FLIES IN ORBITS.

FLY catchers are gray birds. They always perch on the tips of twigs, for their food consists of gnats. Watch one sweep out gracefully, seize an insect that is next to invisible to our eyes, then soar gracefully back to the perch. You can tell a fly catcher by his flight if by nothing else.

E. O.: Alpines are to be distinguished from Aryans by their broader, flatter heads, their straight lusterless hair, their darker eyes, and their heavier skins. Alpine mind will show in crosses when only a few physical traits appear. Its peculiar marks are extreme patience, stolidity, love of music, and plodding industry.

The most remarkable Novel ever written with a plot laid in the city which today dominates the world!

"Within These Walls"

by RUPERT HUGHES

A tale of past and present that weaves into its broad web the life-threads of four gay, reckless generations and rattles skeletons which, for nigh a hundred years, New York has hidden in her closets. Here is the first pen bold enough to scratch the truth through history's smug veneer. Here is a romance—beginning in the September issue of THE RED BOOK MAGAZINE—that draws the hot passions of a century to its veins.

Streets shift and house-fronts change; fashion captiously snips skirt-lengths and hat-brims; whale-oil lamps die down and electric lights flash out: but Father Time can't tell a thousand years of his children apart. Love and hate, faith and deceit, the willfulness of men and the weakness of women are eternal. Ideas alone alter—emotions and their consequences, never.

The first scenes of "Within These Walls" (so vivid and vital is the story that one has the sense of witnessing, rather than reading, the actual drama) are laid in Manhattan and its environs at the peak of the great plague of '37. The wonderful railroad, reaching clear to Harlem, has finally been completed. Mr. Astor's huge and palatial hotel is the talk of the town. Slave- and rum-selling are buttressing the fortunes of soon-to-be "leading old families."

Prominent merchants and financiers openly flaunt their indiscretions, and even ministers drain their several bottles of wine at a sitting.

Rupert Hughes has painted his pictures with veritable back grounds. He has scorned the evasion with which previous authors, touching upon the period, have slicked up their likenesses of nineteenth century society. He has staged his story with authentic properties. He has carried his unflinching plot without a Pecksniffian compromise—and without a breach of taste or decency—from the potter's field at Washington Square, around the years, to the cabarets of Greenwich Village there.

This is the great story of New York: a mighty portrait of its soul—the greatest story of the greatest and strangest city since man set up communities and worshiped their glamour—of New York, the ever-changing and ever-unchanged—New York, arbiter of national elegances and excesses—New York, the pander and the philanthropist—Babel with a thousand towers—general dealer in all the wares and weaknesses of earth—builder of palaces and wrecker of hopes—ever regilding her gauds, painting her old toys afresh for each generation, but always, at wanton heart, the same.

THE RED BOOK MAGAZINE has accustomed its readers to notable standards. A magazine whose contributors regularly include Booth Tarkington, Joseph Hergesheimer, Edith Wharton, John Galsworthy, Melville Davisson Post, W. L. George, Clarence Budington Kelland, Richard Washburn Child, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Mary Synon, among others of equal distinction, is not easily stirred to extraordinary announcements, but "Within These Walls" is such an event. It is so clearly destined to be the literary sensation of years that we must emphasize its publication and urge you not only to read the first of its equally important installments, but to provide as well against missing succeeding numbers (oversale is inevitable) by arranging with your newsdealer to save a copy for you every month.

Get into the highest paying branch of the rapidly expanding automobile industry. 78% of all automobile work is electrical. No matter what you now know about automobiles, this is your big chance to quickly enter this uncrowded, big-money field. 12,000,000 cars in use are equipped with electrical units constantly getting out of order. $75 to $100 a week is waiting for men who know how to repair batteries, ignition, lighting and starting systems, magneto gear shifts, signaling systems, and all electrical units. The specialist is the man who gets the money today. The Automotive Electrician is a specialist and the demand is far ahead of the supply.

Now Easy to Learn

The automobile business is here to stay. The last few years have been only a start. Tremendous additional expansion on the way. And the highest paid and uncrowded branch of this enormous field needs you. We have jobs waiting! There are plenty of auto mechanics to take up a bearing, tighten a bolt, grind out carbon. But, suppose your starter won't start, your battery won't charge, your lights won't light. A Chinese puzzle to the average mechanic! You'll visit from 5 to 10 garages before you find an Automotive Electrician. In a short time you can become a highly paid Automotive Electrician, know his work and be worth—not a dabbler or guesser.

Right here in Chicago the Ambu Engineering Institute you can learn this wonderful profession in short weeks at a very low cost. The special Ambu method does this for you in theory—it shows you how to do things and why. Things formerly considered complicated are made amazingly easy.

Special Class Now Forming to Fill Open Jobs

A special class opens Sept. 5th to help fill jobs that we have been asked to supply men for immediately. Under our plan of individual instruction only 20 men are admitted to a class. Read of big increases that other men are getting through Ambu. Good money to start, then raises after raises, then a fine business of their own, is the general story. What you decide now may mean the difference between plodding along in the old rut or starting out at once for $75 to $100 a week! See me right away so as to make the September 5th class. Or if you cannot come, mail the coupon for our Free Book. I must fill these good jobs quickly. So act at once.

Good Positions for GREGG graduates

Thousands of workers employed in factories are only No. 625 or 2231 to their employers. But every business man knows what his stenographer looks like. Day by day the executive and the stenographer-secretary work side by side. The stenographer is in a position, therefore, to know the methods and problems of a business, and is correspondingly fitted to assume executive responsibilities when the opportunity comes.

Gregg School, for twenty-six years, has been training stenographers of efficiency and business sense whom executives of business prefer and are willing to employ at more than average salaries. Our appointment bureau receives more calls for our graduates than it can possibly fill.

Qualify as a Gregg-trained stenographer, secretary or bookkeeper and step into the better position that is waiting for you.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD

Disciples to Open Huge Meeting at Winona Tuesday

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

THE international convention of the Disciples of Christ will open next Tuesday morning at Winona Lake, Ind., and will continue until Sept. 4. Tomorrow afternoon there will be the annual meeting of the board of managers of the United Christian Missionary society and of the board of education. The convention sessions will be held in the tabernacle, which seats about 10,000. The president of the convention is Stephen E. Fisher. He will preside and on Tuesday evening will make the convention address.

Two of the questions which, it is said, will stir discussion are the proposed removal of the college of missions from Indianapolis and the matter of open membership in the foreign mission field.

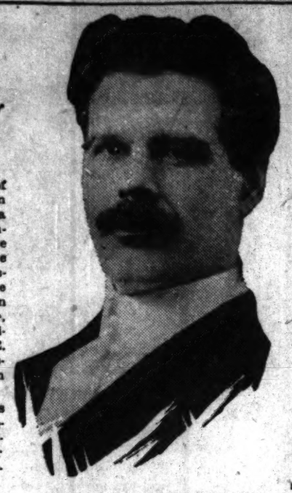
An impressive occasion will be the communion service on next Sunday afternoon when, it is expected, 10,000 will take communion.

Among speakers from outside the Disciples church who will make addresses are Dr. W. O. Thompson, president of Ohio State university and of the International Council of Religious Education, and Roy S. Haynes, federal prohibition commissioner. The conference sermon in the tabernacle at 11 o'clock on Sunday will be preached by Vernon Stauffer. The Sunday evening address will be by W. D. Mackenzie, president of Hartford Seminary Foundation. Reports will be made on prohibition and from the various countries where mission work is carried on.

The annual meeting of the National Evangelistic Association of the Disciples of Christ will begin tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock at Winona Lake, Ind. The meeting will be held in the auditorium which has served Winona Lake for many years. It seats about 4,000. It is now called the old tabernacle to distinguish it from the new structure, which seats 10,000, in which the international convention of the Disciples of Christ will be held. Dr. Charles Reign Scoville of Chicago will make the closing address at the meeting at 11 o'clock a. m. Tuesday. Evangelism in the country, city, and mission fields will be discussed.

Harry A. Wheeler, vice president of the Union Trust company and former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, will make the convocation address of the Garrett Biblical institute, Evanston, next Wednesday afternoon. He is president of the board of trustees of the institute and is the active leader in raising a fund of several hundred thousand dollars for new buildings and endowment.

The Rev. Samuel L. Skevington, D. D., for several years pastor of the Belden Avenue Baptist church, Chicago, is pastor of the First Baptist church, Hollywood, Los Angeles, Cal. He is president of the Ministerial union of Los Angeles, a member of the executive committee of the Los Angeles Church federation, and chairman of the Baptist state board of promotion.



THE REV. E. J. ELIASON.

The Rev. E. J. Eliason is pastor of the Auburn Park Swedish Methodist Episcopal church, which at 3 o'clock will lay the cornerstone of what is expected to be the finest Swedish Methodist Episcopal church in Chicago. The building will be of red brick, with stone trimmings, and will cost $60,000. It will provide for an auditorium seating nearly 600, a Sunday school room, and a gymnasium.

The Rev. Mr. Eliason was born in Sweden and received his academic education there. He came to America thirteen years ago, and completed a course in theology in the Swedish Methodist seminary in Evanston. Seven years ago he became pastor of the Auburn Park church, when it was worshiping in a store and had only forty members. The church has grown rapidly, and hopes to worship in the new building this winter. The store in which services are still being held, is at 78th street and Racine avenue. The new church will be at 7743 Racine avenue. Those having part in the cornerstone ceremonies, in addition to the pastor, will be the Rev. W. C. Bloomquist, district superintendent; the Rev. C. G. Wallenius, Bethany church; the Rev. William Swenson, Humboldt Park Community church, and the Rev. John Thompson, First church.

Today's program at the national convention of Congregational Workers among Colored People, held in the Lincoln Memorial Congregational church, 55th street and Champlain avenue, will be as follows: 10 a. m., memorial service; 11, sermon, the Rev. A. C. Warner, New York; 1 p. m., conference on religious education; 4 p. m., women's massmeeting; 6:30, young people's congress; 7:45 to 10:15, closing session, with several speakers. The final address will be by the newly elected president of the convention.

Bishop Thomas Nicholson of the Chicago area of the Methodist Episcopal church will begin next Wednesday the presidency of the several conferences of the church over which he has supervision. The conference on Wednesday will be the Chicago German, which will meet in Almond, Wis. Beginning on Sept. 6 Bishop Nicholson will hold the Illinois conference in Decatur. The Central Illinois conference will follow on Sept. 13 in Rock Island and his final conference will be Rock River conference, of which Chicago is a part, in Princeton, Ill., Oct. 4. The Central Swedish conference, which includes the Swedish Methodist Episcopal churches of Chicago and vicinity, will meet in Jamestown, N. Y., beginning next Wednesday, and will be presided over by Bishop F. J. McConnell of the Pittsburgh area.

A week end conference for men will be held next Saturday, Sunday and the following Monday at St. Alban's school, Sycamore, Ill., under the auspices of the Chicago local assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of the Episcopal church. The conference leader will be the Rev. Frederick C. Grant, rector of Trinity church, Chicago. Several laymen will be among the speakers. The general subject will be "A Man's Religion," and will be considered under the following heads: "The Uniqueness of Christianity," "The Christian Faith," "The Christian Hope," and "The Christian Life." Notification of attendance is to be sent to J. F. Stevens, 150 North Des Plaines street.

Gypsy Smith, noted as an evangelist in America, England, and on the continent of Europe, will preach today in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York. He announces that he must cancel certain engagements in America for the purpose of returning to England, where, he says, a remarkable religious awakening is taking place. He reports that the largest buildings are packed daily and nightly and thousands are unable to obtain admission.

A retreat for members and friends of the Catholic Instruction league will be given in the chapel of the sodality hall of the Holy Family Jesuit church, 11th and May streets, beginning next Saturday at 10 a. m. and closing on Monday, Sept. 4, at 5 p. m. The Rev. James Preuss, S. J., will conduct the exercises of the retreat. There will be a retreat at the Convent of Our Lady of the Cenacle, 513 Fullerton parkway, beginning next Friday. The Rev. E. A. Jones, S. J., will preach.

An open air carnival for the benefit of St. Catharine of Genoa Catholic church will be given on the parish grounds, 118th street and Lowe avenue, beginning next Thursday and continuing to Sept. 9. An automobile parade through Roseland and West Pullman will be followed by an address on the carnival grounds by the Rev. Timothy O'Shea, pastor of Our Lady of Solace church.

The Rev. Richard D. Hughes, pastor of the Emerald Avenue Presbyterian church, has returned from his vacation in Europe and will preach next Sunday morning in the New Regent theater, 6826 South Halsted street, where the congregation is worshiping until a new church building is erected. He visited the Passion Play at Oberammergau and was entertained in the home of Anton Lang, who takes the part of the Christ in the Passion Play. Mrs. Hughes accompanied him on the trip.

The Rev. Gardner MacWhorter, St. Edmund's Episcopal church, will speak today at 2 o'clock at the Bridewell, Chicago's House of Correction. The Rev. David E. Gibson is superintendent of the service.

Insects

MOSQUITOES HATE THIS FACE.

HERE is the face of a dragon fly. As you notice, it is mostly eyes. Dragon flies are predmninently creatures of the air. They can fly forward, backward, or sideways, and can even stop, all while on the wing. Their vision is quite in keeping with their power of flight. A dragon fly sees things more distinctly than any other insect, and in all directions at once, and woe betide the mosquito his eyes rest upon.

"-they're wearing 'em longer"

They wear longer if we match the skins properly and lengthen your Fur Coat

We Match Skins and make your last year's coat over into the latest style. Get prices elsewhere and then bring your coat here and see how reasonable our charges are in comparison.

We Reline your coat and sew up rips in the fur for $30 per garment. This price includes the cost of silk for new lining. Hundreds of silk linings to select from.

We Manufacture all kinds of fur garments from the cheapest to the most expensive. If you want something special come to us. We have it, and we believe we will be able to save you money.

We Resell manufacturers' samples only. All new merchandise. We never have and never expect to sell second-hand furs. We guarantee every garment purchased from us to be brand new and first quality skins. How we sell so cheaply is our secret, but we can say this much—that it is done by the large volume of sales we handle.

A visit to this store is a revelation in itself—there is not another like it anywhere. Our location is very good, especially if you use an automobile, as there are no parking restrictions in the neighborhood, and thus you can use as much time in shopping here as you wish. Selecting a fur coat should be given considerable thought, and there are so many different kinds to select from.

YOUR CHOICE

$1,150 AND UNDER

Our new car department has done the biggest business in its history. New models have been snapped up by old owners as quickly as the cars arrived. Naturally this resulted in a big exchange of used cars for new ones. Far more than we ever anticipated.

Our floors are, therefore, crowded to capacity, and in order to make room for the constant stream of increased new orders, we have decided that it would be good policy to clear our floors quickly and give the public an extra price inducement to bring this about.

Ordinarily these cars would sell for much more today than they are priced, notwithstanding a market of big reductions.

From your standpoint it is always wiser to choose a used car from the largest possible showing, provided they are recent exchanges, as each and every one of these are. Experience proves this to be true. Our showing is a veritable exposition of used cars of almost every make, model, and color. The variety is exceptional. An ideal situation to save needless shopping back and forth. Here you have the How under one roof.

Every car is rigidly guaranteed as represented, and it makes no difference to you have an original opportunity to trade, and at a price, anywhere below $1,150.00. We doubt whether this opportunity will ever present itself again. Therefore why not advantage of it. Here is a partial list of some of the wonderful buys. Then ask about our plan of financing. You can't do better.

ESTABLISHED 1903.
2215 Michigan-av.

Paige Distributors

WHEN "BIRD-SYKES" SAY "REBUILT"

they do not mean merely "shined up," "tightened up," and "tuned up." Rebuilt in the Bird-Sykes shop means taking apart motor, transmission, and rear axle, measuring or testing parts to determine wear, replacing worn parts with new, rebuilding, adjusting, tuning up, repairing body, refinishing top and upholstery. That is why a Bird-Sykes rebuilt car satisfies the eye as a new car, and its performance is the same as new.

PEERLESS TOURING, 1917. This is our standard 7 passenger touring car which we have just taken into our stock in very nice condition. For a car of this year it has not been driven a great many miles. The paint, which is a dark Dustproof Gray is in good condition, it has burnt-orange wheels and is a very attractive car. Mechanically it will give satisfactory service for many thousands of miles. We are offering this car as our special bargain for today and feel that the one who gets it will make an exceptional buy. If interested do not delay seeing and riding in it as it will undoubtedly be sold to the first person who sees it. Special for this sale, $400.

HAYNES SEDAN, MODEL 47, 1921. This standard Haynes 7 passenger sedan is one that is above the average in condition. It is painted a dark blue and is equipped with an excellent set of cord tires, 1 extra, bumper, clock, motometer, and other extras. Mechanically it is exceptionally fine. In order to avail yourself of a bargain in a late model Haynes sedan your immediate action will be necessary. Do not put off seeing and riding in it, if interested. Special for this sale, $1,350.

PEERLESS SEDAN, 1920. We cannot tell you in a newspaper description just what a value we have to offer in this nice, large Peerless enclosed car. It is one that has been privately owned and has been kept in exceptional condition. It is painted a beautiful Maroon, with black running gear. Mechanically it will carry the standard warranty of the Peerless Motor Car Co. of Illinois. Peerless owners are reluctant to part with cars of this type and for that reason we seldom have them to offer, particularly at the price we are offering this one. It has much extra equipment, including bumper, motometer, heater, and other extras. This is a rare bargain at our price of $1,400.

HAYNES TOWN CAR, MODEL 6-39. This is a car that has been owned and driven privately and one that is shown the owner in condition. Would make an ideal car for either private or commercial work. In taxi service it would pay for itself very, very quickly. It is painted a beautiful shade of Dustproof Gray with black running gear. The cord tires are like new. Mechanically will bear most rigid examination and demonstrations. The extra equipment includes spare tire, spotlight, motometer, bumper, etc. This is a very snappy and serviceable car at an exceptionally low price. Is ready for many miles of service without any expense for repairs or refinishing. An automobile that should be seen to be appreciated. Special for this sale, $1,000.

PEERLESS SEDAN, 1921. This beautiful high grade 7 passenger enclosed Peerless car has just been received from our Shop and Refinishing Department, in such condition that it would be hard to distinguish from new. It is a special job in many ways, with plenty of extra equipment such as wire wheels, dual lamps, bumpers front and rear, etc. This is the first sedan of this series that we have ever had to offer and believe that if you could see this automobile and ride in it you would not hesitate in making a decision that would make you the proud owner of a car, the equal of which we do not believe you can duplicate anywhere, particularly at the price we are asking for this one. In detail, appointments and mechanical condition, it is considered as the ordinary used car. Price, $2,000.

STUTZ BEARCAT $1,650

Descendant of a long line of illustrious champions of road and race course, the Stutz Bearcat Speedster, with its low, smart, distinctive lines and sturdy chassis typifies all that one could wish for in a car of this character.

The particular one that we are offering at this very low figure is in an absolutely perfect coach and mechanical condition; presents the appearance of new, and carries the same guarantee and excellent service that we furnish with a new Stutz.

The body and upper side of the fenders are finished in deep wine maroon, in contrast with the wire wheels, springs and double bar bumper in light red. A set of new rookey tan seat covers with top boot to match has just been fitted on. The tires have new corduroy cords. Additional equipment consists of extra wire wheel, tire tube and drum type tire cover, shock absorber, motometer, spotlight, etc. The 6,740 miles of careful driving that this car had when it was put through our mechanical department has not contributed one apparent bit of wear. It's a car bargain and operates as fine as it left the factory. See it today. It's an extremely scarce model—one that we receive many calls for. The price is very low.
